Former government official named UMass chancellor

By KEVIN BOWE
Collegian Staff

Promising continued leadership for the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, Dr. Joseph Duffey was unanimously named Chancellor by the Board of Trustees on August 11.

Duffey, former Chairman of the National Endowment for the Humanities and assistant secretary of state under former President Jimmy Carter, will begin his new job October 1. He replaces Henry Koffler who became president of the University of Arizona last Spring.

"Joe Duffey is an ideal candidate for the University in the 1980's," said UMass president David C. Knapp when recommending Duffey to the Trustees. "He is a person of national prominence who...(will) be effective in helping to broaden our base of fiscal support and will strengthen our external relations in general. We regard advancement in these two areas as critical to the future growth of the University."

At a press conference following his appointment, Duffey said he will "listen and learn" in the beginning of his administration, adding that it would be "imprudent" to talk of changes on the campus so soon.

"The Amherst campus is very complex. It has many constituents and they are used to being listened to. If changes are to be made, input would be gained from all concerning interests," said Duffey.

Duffey was chosen over two other finalists: acting UMass Chancellor Loren Baritz, who served as Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs and Provost at UMass, and former University of Miami (of Ohio) Vice President and Provost David C. Brown. Recommendations were forwarded to Knapp by a search committee composed of students, faculty and administrators.

The campus reaction to Duffey's appointment was positive.

"It's a positive event," said George Sulzner, vice president of the faculty union, "he (Duffey) brings prestige to the campus."

"He handles himself quite well," said Student Government Association President and Student Trustee Jim Murphy. "He's a quick learner who works well with people."

Duffey has a varied backround

By KEVIN BOWE
Collegian Staff

Dr. Joseph Duffey, the newly appointed chancellor of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, has a varied background which mixes liberal political activism with strong academic credentials.

Duffey, 50, the son of a coal miner who also served in the West Virginia State legislature, earned two bachelor's degrees in the 1950s, from Marshall University in West Virginia and the Andover Theological School in Newton and received his master's from Yale University in 1960. An ordained Congregational minister, Duffey received his Ph.D. in 1960 from the Hartford Seminary Foundation.

While teaching and studying for his doctorate, Duffey became nationally known for his stands on civil rights and his opposition to the war in Vietnam.

In 1968, Duffey, along with his present wife Anne Wexler, co-chaired the Eugene McCarthy Committee for President in Connecticut, which was described by one reporter as "an insurgent coalition of political amateurs led by a congregational minister...(and) made up of students, housewives and academicans who successfully challenged the (Connecticut) party leadership" by capturing 44 percent of the primary vote for McCarthy.

Duffey became national chairman of the Americans for Democratic Action in 1969. The group advocated positions which, at the time, were considered radical, including amnesty for draft evaders and deserters of the Vietnam War.

In 1970, Duffey was the Democratic nominee for United States Senate in Connecticut. In his campaign, managed by Wexler, Duffey softened his connection from the anti-war movement and advocated economic issues. He reached out, in his words, to the "working class", gaining the endorsement from many conservative labor unions after appearing in picket lines supporting a strike at a General Electric plant in Hartford.

Duffey's candidacy drew scorn from then Vice-President Spiro Agnew who called him a "marxist revisionist," and praise from the New York Times which wrote, "(he) displays a high idealism and a down to earth political drive that appear in combination far too rarely to be passed up" in endorsing his campaign for Senate. Duffey lost the close three-person race to Lowell Weicker.

Between 1970 and 1974 Duffey filled fellowships at Harvard University, Calhoun University and Yale University before becoming the chief executive officer of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) from 1974 to '76.

As the head of AAUP, one of the largest faculty unions in the country with 72,000 members, Duffey should be "very familiar with the academic issues and concerns of being a faculty member," said Professor George Sulzner, vice president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors, the UMass faculty union.

Duffey's background will break the mold

By KEVIN BOWE
Collegian Staff

Since 1970, the University of Massachusetts at Amherst has had a geologist, botanist and a zoologist as chancellors. Dr. Joseph Duffey breaks that mold.

"My academic work poses an interesting question for the Amherst campus," Duffey said at a press conference after he was appointed chancellor. "My undergraduate work was in the classics — Greek and Latin studies. My graduate studies were in philosophy and social ethics.

Duffey will be appointed as a tenured professor at the next Board of Trustees meeting, but because his academic work is concentrated in theology, and UMass has no religion department, it is unclear to which department he will be appointed.

Duffey, unlike the other major finalists, has no real experience in administering an institution of higher education.

"My academic administration is very peculiar. I was an acting dean at age 28 as a graduate student (at Yale University). My administrative experience comes primarily from the NEH (Duffey served as chairman of the National Endowment for the Humanities) and the state department (as assistant secretary for cultural and educational affairs)," Duffey said.

Duffey has sporadically visited the UMass campus since his appointment between his duties as a guest scholar at the Brookings Institution in Washington and a guest lecturer at the University of California at Los Angeles.

"This is a campus of people with a great loyalty to this place, although they don't wear it on their sleeves. People here care about the place and I understand why. This university is a very civerse institution," he said.

In an interview on campus last Wednesday, Duffey commented on some of the changes that recently occured on campus. "I am very enthusiastic about the new writing program," Duffey said, refering to the change from the Rhetoric requirement to one with emphasis on writing skills geared to a student's program of study.

Presently Duffey is "digesting" the General Education Plan proposed by a committee of the Faculty Senate. Duffey has read acting chancellor Loren Baritz's long range plan for the campus and intended to read the plan developed by former chancellor Henry Koffler's committee over the Labor Day weekend.

Duffey left his post at AAUP to serve in the Carter administration as the assistant secretary of state for education and cultural affairs for one year. In 1977, Duffey was appointed to a four year term as chairman of the National Endowment for the Humanities where he administered a budget of $150 million and a staff of about 300 people.

"His NEH experience gives him the knowledge that will enable the University to receive more grants," UMass President David C. Knapp said at a press conference after Duffey's appointment.

Duffey is currently a guest lecturer at the University of California at Los Angeles and a guest scholar in government studies at the Brookings Institution in Washington, D.C.

"Dr. Duffey was very receptive andknowledgeable about the problems on the campus iduring the campus interview which all major candidates had)," said Kathy Murray, president of the University Staff Association.

"He is a different kind of chancellor than the past, he has good managerial skills that this University needs," said Rick Taupier, speaker of the Professional Association at UMass/Amherst (PUMA).

Baritz's role in the Duffey administration has not yet been made clear, but many in the University community have expressed hope he will stay on as provost.

"The team of Duffey and Baritz would be a very dynamic team," Sulzner said.

Duffey will receive $76,000 a year as chancellor.

In some parts, our new chancellor may be referred to as Mr. Anne Wexler.

Wexler, wife of Dr. Joseph Duffey, a former special assistant to President Jimmy Carter, deputy undersecretary of commerce, associate publisher of Rolling Stone magazine, campaign manager for Congressional and Senatorial candidates and a business consultant, is not a housewife.

"The nature of my life is to get involved," Wexler said, in a phone interview from her Washington, D.C., office of Wexler & Associates.

Between her consulting business and her duties as an adjunct professor at the John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University, Wexler said she hopes to get involved with the University of Massachusetts community and the surrounding area.

A graduate of Skidmore College, Wexler says she has always been involved in politics at various levels of government. In 1966 she was the campagin manager of one of the first anti-Vietnam war candidates for Congress. Along with Duffey, she co-chaired the Eugene McCarthy campaign for President in Connecticut.

As a delegate to the 1968 Democratic National Convention in Chicago, Wexler served on the Rules Committee (and later the McGovern Commission) that sought to reform the nominating process for president, she said.

After managing Duffey's unsuccessful senatorial bid in 1970, Wexler worked for Common Cause in the successful ratification of the Twenty-sixth amendment to the U.S. Constitution which gave 18 year olds the right to vote.

Wexler then worked for Sen. Edmund Muskie's run for President in 1972 before working for the Democratic National Committee on a national voter registration drive.

From 1974 to 1976, Wexler served as associate publisher of Rolling Stone with the responsibility of running the Washington, D.C. News Bureau and handling the business operation of the paper, she said.

With the Carter administration, Wexler first served on the Carter-Mondale transition team before becoming deputy undersecretary of commerce for one year. She then came on to Carter's staff to deal with constituent development and relations.

Financial aid cuts to be painful

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Correspondent

Substantial cuts in federal financial aid programs are forcing many students to turn to loans and belt-tightening measures, according to Arthur R. Jackson, director of financial aid at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

The Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant program has been cut back 25 percent and the College Work Study program 21 percent, Jackson said. In addition, eligibility levels for Pell Grants (formerly Basic Education Opportunity Grants) have been tightened, reducing the number of recipients.

"More students are becoming dependent on loan funds," Jackson said, as grants are reduced. "Students are starting to realize that an education is just like a mortgage."

"We're telling students that loans are nothing to be afraid of, but to respect. Students have to be wise consumers," he said.

New loan requirements on the federal level require a "needs test" for student loan applicants. Jackson said this has resulted in few and smaller loans for students whose families make $30,000 or more. The new requirements have also doubled the amount of time the office needs to process the loan paperwork. Over 10,000 loans were processed this year, he said.

Loans weren't the only financial aid items delayed this year. Financial aid award letters were sent out two weeks later this year than last year, due to late receipt of federal and state guidelines.

Most schools sent financial aid letters even later than UMass, Jackson said, some as late as July and August. UMass letters were sent in early June.

Loans aren't the only method of coping with cuts in grants, Jackson said. The Financial Aid Office has tried to stress the importance of budgeting to students, and has run budgeting workshops at freshman orientation sessions.

Jackson noted students will have to prioritize items more now, perhaps deciding between a chemistry textbook and a night out. He pointed out that in the past year, many students have had trouble paying $5 or $10 lab fees even though they were aware of them all semester. "Students have to know how to budget money," he said.

Jackson said although rising costs at UMass have not been easy to cope with, the increases have been less here than at many other schools. "The cost of attendance at UMass has risen less than the national average," he said.

Tuition and other fee increases have been met with increased aid on the state level, Jackson said, making up a small part of the annual federal aid cuts.

"The legislature and the Board of Regents have seen financial aid to education as a priority," Jackson said. For example, he said, tuition waivers were increased substantially.

"One thing students should be cognizant of is that this is an election year," Jackson said. "Students should express their opinions to legislators. They and their parents should be involved in making education a priority."

Jackson commended the student organization Students Advocating Financial Aid (SAFA) for is lobbying efforts on behalf of education, and suggested that other students follow this lead.

The new cage may cost more

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Correspondent

Extensive renovations now being planned for the Curry Hicks Cage may cost University of Massachusetts students up to $20 each per year, according to a recent memo from UMass President David C. Knapp.

But Dean of Physical Education David Bischoff called the fee estimate "not carefully thought out" and said that none of the funding proposals for the $2 million project included a "significant increase in student fees."

Cage renovations would include replacing the existing dirt floor with a concrete-based floor and synthetic surface. Also included would be telescoping bleachers to seat 3,800 and new locker rooms, storage areas and toilet facilities.

Knapp proposed in a July 22 memo that the UMass Board of Trustees sell the Curry Hicks Cage to the UMass Building Authority (UMBA) and authorize the UMBA to finance the project. Knapp noted that outside donations and fundraising might raise some of the needed funds, but said "it would appear unlikely that the University can obtain enough outside gifts to accomplish the renovation...it is likely that the project will have to be supported by student fee income."

Knapp estimated that the fee pledge required would be "in the neighborhood of $20 per student per year."

Student Government Association (SGA) President Jim Murphy, a member of the Board of Trustees, called the transfer of the Curry Hicks building to the UMBA a "dangerous precedent" and said the legality of the transfer was "questionable" in that an academic building is being transferred to the UMBA for the first time.

Bischoff said he didn't think the question of precedent was "relevant" and said that "the student president doesn't understand" the issue.

He said that if fundraising fails to pay the cost of the renovations, he would suggest that an admission price be charged students at the door to basketball games, possibly one dollar.

Bischoff said that if the facility is not renovated, "we're going to lose the whole ball game," referring to the status of the basketball team. "It's impossible to run a first rate basketball team in a fourth rate facility."

Murphy said he is not opposed to the renovation, only to the suggestion of a student fee to fund it.

"They're trying the path of least resistance" by proposing a student fee, Murphy said. He said that obtaining state funds would be a better method to fund the project.

But Bischoff said state funds would be slow and hard in coming because the Curry Hicks Cage is not a priority of the University or the state legislature.

"We can't use state money unless we want to wait a zillion years," he said.

Glen Stein of the UMass President's office agreed. "We'll never get it done if we wait for the state to do it." Stein said that the UMBA was chosen to finance the project instead of the stae because it offered a "flexibility of funding sources that we can use," including but not limited to student fees.

Dean Bischoff said that the project is currently in the design stage, and that bids are being solicited for architectural plans. When that stage begins in October, he said, the firm chosen will have nine months to develop the plans. Thus, bidding and actual construction will probably not occur until next summer "at the most fortunate."

Bischoff said he was concerned about possible time conflicts in the cage if construction is started late, since that might interfere with the basketball season.

Bischoff said that with increased attendance at basketball games, "it's not just nice to have these facilities improved. It's imperative." Even after the cage renovation, he said, he still hopes plans can be developed for a larger facility for basketball and other sports.

Knapp was out of the country and unavailable for comment.

The old Rhetoric Program is dead: Long live the new Writing Program

By BRIAN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Rhetoric is dead. The Rhetoric Program which received so much criticism and generated so much frustration at the University has been removed from the curriculum.

However, this does not mean upper classmen and incoming freshmen will not receive training in writing. A new Writing Program has been instituted to take the place of the Rhetoric Program which had handled the task of reenforcing writing skills for the University's students, said Professor Charles Moran, director of the new program.

Starting with this year's freshman class, all incoming students will be required to take a writing proficiency course during orientation, Moran said. Those upper classmen who have not yet completed any part of their rhetoric requirement will also be involved in the program.

The hour long test was used to divide students into three groups: Students with superior skills, who will be exempted from the program; students who need a basic freshman writing course — English 190 A; and finally, those who need extensive "coaching" before they enter the basic course, Moran said.

English 190 A, titled College Writing, will be administered by the English department and the basic thrust of the course will be writing, Moran said. A minimum of six essays will be required of all participants who will edit their own and their colleagues' work, he said.

The other course will stress a method developed for the less accomplished writers, Moran said. They will be allowed to improve their skills at their own pace, he said.

In a change from the former practice of the Rhetoric Program, students will not be able to complete their entire requirement in their freshman year, Moran said. In their junior year students will take a writing course tailored for their particular field of study so that they can develop those skills necessary for their chosen careers.

Those students who have already completed one half of their Rhetoric requirement will enter the new program at this second level, Sarah Stelzner, assistant director of the program said.

The chief difference between this new program and the Rhetoric Program, Moran said, will be that the new program will stress only writing, whereas the Rhetoric Program used theory and language skills as an integral portion of the learning process.

Art Jackson named director of Financial Aid Office

By MIKE FOLEY
Collegian Staff

The Financial Aid Office at the University of Massachusetts has a new director.

Arthur R. Jackson was appointed June 20 to fill the post vacated by Ed C. Apodaca last September. Jackson, who has been associate director of Financial Aid at UMass for five years, says he will be looking to find new ways to help students pay for their education.

In April, the search committee headed by Ruth Green, personel coordinator, decided none of the pool of 30 applicants before the committee, in which Jackson was a finalist, was qualified for the post, and the committee began searching for new applicants.

But Jackson, who will complete his doctoral dissertation on higher education in the spring and who holds a masters in sociology, filed a grievance with Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson, stating there were qualified applicants among the original pool and the search for applicants should not be reopened.

Madson agreed with Jackson and ordered the committee to present a finalist from the original 30 applicants. Madson himself appointed Jackson to the post.

Jackson declined comment on the controversy Wednesday saying, "I try to deal more in the future than in the past.

"The Federal government is lowering spending for educational institutions," Jackson said. "We are trying to find alternative ways for students to pay for their education."

"Students and parents are going to have to contribute more to education, because that is the policy of the federal government," he said.

The Financial Aid office will be trying more to find summer and intersession jobs for students.

"We have been holding job fairs," Jackson said. "A number of students have been able to get jobs that way. We'll be doing that more and more."

"We would like to be able to create a pool of jobs that we can refer students to," he said.

Jackson said he also hopes more scholarships will come from private corporations and foundations.

"UMass has not really looked to get scholarships from corporations and alumni," he said. "These are areas that haven't been explored. Hopefully we can use the influence of UMass graduates to help current students."

"But before you can request funds from alumni and corporations you have to make visible what UMass is doing," he said. "Public relations goes a long way in beginning a scholarship drive and attracting funds."

Jackson sees the Financial Aid Office at UMass as not just a bureaucracy managing $50 million in aid funds, but as a liason between students, the administration, and state and federal governments.

"The Financial Aid Office influences the policies of the entire university, because everyone realizes that if students cannot afford to go, then there will be no University," he said.

"We want to let students know that dollar for dollar, federal policy has an affect on their academic future. That way they can be educated and better able to respond to their legislators."

"Students see this office as a one-eyed ogre that tries to think up new ways to make their lives tougher," he said. "But that is not true. We are most concerned with the needs of the students."

New office formed to fight oppression

By JEFF ROSENBERG
Collegian Staff

Racism, sexism and anti-semitism will be targeted by a new Office of Human Relations at the University of Massachusetts.

One of the faults of the University organizational structure was that various agencies dealing with human relations issues worked independent of one another without any central coordination of services, said coordinator Judy Davis.

Davis said her office was an outgrowth of former Chancellor Henry Koffler's Commission on Civility and Human Relations, which coordinated last years "Year Towards Civility."

The University has a coordinated program for handling victims of rape and sexual assault which encompasses mainly the University Police, Everywoman's Center and University Health Services, said Grant Ingle, a process consultant for the new office.

More work is needed to anticipate and respond more coherently to cases of racism, anti-Semitism and other incivilities like homophobia and agism, he said.

Santana, Jimmy Cliff first for UPC

Flamenco guitarist Paco DeLucia, who thrilled a UMass audience during a performance with Al DiMeola and John McLaughlin last year, will be appearing in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall on Oct. 3.

By MICHAEL FOLEY
Collegian Staff

The Union Program Council (UPC) with an almost wholly new staff, is set for another year of bringing music to UMass, says Talent Coordinator Bill Prichett.

"Things are going great," said Prichett.

Santana will perform on Sept. 17 at 8 p.m. in the Curry Hicks Cage, kicking off a semester of top-talent gigs. Tickets will be $10 for students, $12 for the general public and will go on sale Sept. 9.

Jimmy Cliff and Peter Tosh will play Sept. 23 at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center. Tickets will be $9 and $10 for students, $10 and $11 for the general public.

"Cliff and Tosh are the two top reggae bands right now," said Prichett.

Chick Corea will appear with Paco de Lucia, in what is being billed as the "Touchstone Tour", in the Fine Arts Center Oct. 3 at 8 p.m. Tickets will be $7.50 and $8.50 for students $8.50 and $9.50 for the general public.

"Paco is a phenomenal guitarist," said Prichett. Chick and Paco recently collaborated on Chick's new album "Touchstone".

Joe Jackson, a new wave artist, will play his unique brand of music on Oct. 21 at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center. Tickets will be $9.50 and $10.50 for students, $10.50 and $11.50 for the general public.

"UMass is a diverse community of people, so you have to please a lot of different types," said Prichett.

"You have to pay for better acts," said Prichett. "We could get older acts that aren't doing as well, and have cheaper ticket prices."

"It's nice to have a bunch of new people on the UPC staff said Prichett. "Everyone has a lot of new ideas. But," he said, "we got a lot to learn real quick, because there is a lot to learn."

Chick Corea, a jazz artist with a Latin influence, will be appearing along with Paco DeLucia at 8 p.m. Oct. 3 in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

'First Week' events start fall semester off with a bang

By KEN LUNDBERG
Collegian Staff

The fireworks exploding high over the athletic fields at the University of Massachusetts last night started this week off with a bang, but there is still more to come as "First Week '82" is underway.

And appropriately enough, the next event of a week's worth of activities - the "Outrageous Obstacle Course" - will alleviate the tension of anyone trying to cope with the administrative bureaucracy or any of the other problems that usually infest the campus this mixed up week.

"First Week '82" is a student-run program (costing about $7,000), designed to make life a little easier for freshmen making their debuts and veteran students as well. This week-long program, which will be going on day and night, consists, basically, of eight main events.

The "Outrageous Obstacle Course" which students can challenge between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. today will be located in the horseshoe between Whitmore and the School of Business Administration. One of nine obstacles (that should prove to be as confusing as the Whitmore building itself) is the "Wobble Tube," a 16 foot nylon mesh tunnel suspended in the air.

At 7, 9 and 11 p.m. tomorrow, the film "Missing" starring Jack Lemmon and Sissy Spacek will be shown in the Campus Center Auditorium (admission $1). Also tomorrow and Wednesday, the Outing Club will provide canoe rides beginning at noon.

The Amazing Fantasy Jugglers, a Boston-based juggling and comedy act, will be clowning around on the Metawampe Lawn tomorrow afternoon from noon to 2 p.m. Tomorrow night, the funk band from Boston, "Hypertension," will play for the "Freshperson Dance" at 9 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

To get a better understanding of the Recognized Student Organizations, there will be a referral fair outside the Student Union Building until 3 p.m. Thursday. At 8 p.m. Thursday, hypnotist Jerry Valley will take audience participants on a fantasized bus ride and turn them into Western yodeling stars.

Stephen Baird, a street singer from Boston who has entertained the UMass crowd before with guitar and voice, will again perform in the Student Union Ballroom from noon to 2 p.m. Thursday.

SAP sting sharper under new law

By HANNAH HOSOM
Collegian Staff

Local police said they intend to operate much as they did last year in preventing drunk driving, but that those arrested will face penalties more severe than in the past.

"We will enforce the laws of the Commonwealth as we have in the past. It is the punishment that actually has been changed," said Gerald T. O'Neill, director of Public Safety at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

Signed by Massachusetts Governor Edward King in early August, the new law recommends a sentence of attendance at an alcohol abuse program, suspension of license for 30 days and a fine between $100 and $1,000 for a first time offender. Anyone arrested for drunk driving before the bill was signed is still not considered a first-time offender.

"We're looking to have less people hurt over negligent behavior, said Amherst Police Chief Donald N. Maia. "The vast majority of students know about SAP (Speed and Alcohol Enforcement Program), which will be continued and enforced."

SAP was begun last October with a $28,500 grant from the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau. The Program was designed to discourage driving drunk, and operated on the weekends through June, 1982.

Maia said SAP would be continued this year and enforced on a 24-hour per day basis. The department uses radar continually, two during normal hours and three during "peak" hours, Maia said.

Individuals are stopped for motor vehicle offenses, Maia said, then the officer determines if the individual is intoxicated.

"Our method has worked well," he said. "We're not after arrests, we're after compliance."

According to the Amherst Police Department Annual Report, total accidents between October 1981 and June 1982 were reduced by 8 percent as compared to the previous year. Accidents during hours when SAP operated — Friday and Saturday nights between 9 p.m. and 3 a.m. — decreased by 54 percent as compared with the same hours last year.

The number of people injured during these times was reduced by 82 percent, and those hospitalized by 90 percent. This brought the total number of people injured last year down by a full 25 percent. Maia said the presence of SAP on the streets has also had an effect on the number of crimes committed at night.

The report states "the program can only be considered an overwhelming success. Positive evaluations by the federal government have led to state funding of other similar programs."

The police report also mentions the University Health Services as a "valuable resource" in educating people about alcohol abuse. Seminars were held last year and are scheduled again this September to train area bar owners and bartenders.

Carlene Ricchelli of UHS said the training includes such topics as legislation, liability and stages of intoxication, and strategies for shutting off someone who has had too much to drink.

"I don't think anyone on campus can insist on drinking and driving. If you're going to drink, don't drive, stay away from the front of the wheel," O'Neill said.

"We've seen too many students killed as a result of drunk driving. I think every cop on has witnessed this," he said. "It's not very nice when we have to deal with the aftermath."

Warning: Tough new penalties enacted for driving while drunk

On Sept. 1, a new law, recently signed by Massachusetts Governor Edward King, went into effect mandating tough penalties for drunk driving. The penalties, to be decided in court, range from a fine and enrollment in an alcohol education course to possible jail terms for repeated offenders.

First Offense: (if there are no injuries)
- 30 day suspension of license
- $100 to $1,000 fine
- court can order attendance of an alcohol abuse program, at a cost to the offender of $400

First Offense: (if injuries)
- imprisonment for up to two years
- loss of license for one year
- fine up to $1,000

Second Offense within six years: (anyone who has presently been convicted or attended an alcohol abuse program is not considered a first-time offender.)
- mandatory confinement of seven days in jail or 14 days in a residential alcohol treatment center - judge decides how much of the center's costs are paid by the state
- two year loss of license
- $300 to $1,000 fine

Third or Subsequent offense:
- mandatory 60 days in jail
- five year loss of license
- $500 to $1,000 fine

Causing death: (considered a felony)
- mandatory minimum sentence of one year, can be extended by the judge to 10 years
- 10 year loss of license
- $5,000 fine

Bars repeatedly found to have disorderly persons leaving will be considered public nuisances and can be closed for a year.

Car crash kills 3 UM freshmen on Amherst road

By KEN LUNDBERG
Collegian Staff

Three University of Massachusetts students of the Class of 1986 scheduled to begin classes this semester were killed instantly last Wednesday night when their car struck a utility pole near the Mill Valley Bridge on Rte. 116.

The three victims, all 20-years-old, were Patrick C. Farmer of 20 South Whitney St., Amherst; Meg J. Dolan of North Quincy; and Brigitte A. Judge of Minneapolis, Minn. Farmer, the driver of the vehicle, was to be a freshman at the University and both Dolan and Judge reentering students.

Associate Medical Examiner Donald Abel said the possibilities of the fatal crash being drug or alcohol related will not be known until autopsies for the bodies of the three victims, found dead at the scene have been completed.

Amherst Police Chief Donald Maia said the bodies couldn't be pulled from the car until crews from both the Western Massachusetts Electric Co. and New England Telephone Co. arrived to secure the utility pole for Amherst firefighters who then cut the car open with the jaws of life.

The car, a Volkswagen Sirocco, was reportedly traveling at a high rate of speed, police said, before the driver lost control and struck the utility pole on the opposite side of the highway at about 8 p.m. No other vehicles were involved, police said.

The "Outrageous Obstacle Course" which students can challenge between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. today will be located in the horseshoe between Whitmore and the School of Business Administration. One of nine obstacles (that should prove to be as confusing as the Whitmore building itself) is the "Wobble Tube," a 16 foot nylon mesh tunnel suspended in the air.

At 7, 9 and 11 p.m. tomorrow, the film "Missing" starring Jack Lemmon and Sissy Spacek will be shown in the Campus Center Auditorium (admission $1). Also tomorrow and Wednesday, the Outing Club will provide canoe rides beginning at noon.

The Amazing Fantasy Jugglers, a Boston-based juggling and comedy act, will be clowning around on the Metawampe Lawn tomorrow afternoon from noon to 2 p.m. Tomorrow night, the funk band from Boston, "Hypertension," will play for the "Freshperson Dance" at 9 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

To get a better understanding of the Recognized Student Organizations, there will be a referral fair outside the Student Union Building until 3 p.m. Thursday. At 8 p.m. Thursday, hypnotist Jerry Valley will take audience participants on a fantasized bus ride and turn them into Western yodeling stars.

Stephen Baird, a street singer from Boston who has entertained the UMass crowd before with guitar and voice, will again perform in the Student Union Ballroom from noon to 2 p.m. Thursday.

SAP sting sharper under new law

By HANNAH HOSOM
Collegian Staff

Local police said they intend to operate much as they did last year in preventing drunk driving, but that those arrested will face penalties more severe than in the past.

"We will enforce the laws of the Commonwealth as we have in the past. It is the punishment that actually has been changed," said Gerald T. O'Neill, director of Public Safety at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

Signed by Massachusetts Governor Edward King in early August, the new law recommends a sentence of attendance at an alcohol abuse program, suspension of license for 30 days and a fine between $100 and $1,000 for a first time offender. Anyone arrested for drunk driving before the bill was signed is still not considered a first-time offender.

"We're looking to have less people hurt over negligent behavior, said Amherst Police Chief Donald N. Maia. "The vast majority of students know about SAP (Speed and Alcohol Enforcement Program), which will be continued and enforced."

SAP was begun last October with a $28,500 grant from the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau. The Program was designed to discourage driving drunk, and operated on the weekends through June, 1982.

Maia said SAP would be continued this year and enforced on a 24-hour per day basis. The department uses radar continually, two during normal hours and three during "peak" hours, Maia said.

Individuals are stopped for motor vehicle offenses, Maia said, then the officer determines if the individual is intoxicated.

"Our method has worked well," he said. "We're not after arrests, we're after compliance."

According to the Amherst Police Department Annual Report, total accidents between October 1981 and June 1982 were reduced by 8 percent as compared to the previous year. Accidents during hours when SAP operated — Friday and Saturday nights between 9 p.m. and 3 a.m. — decreased by 54 percent as compared with the same hours last year.

The number of people injured during these times was reduced by 82 percent, and those hospitalized by 90 percent. This brought the total number of people injured last year down by a full 25 percent. Maia said the presence of SAP on the streets has also had an effect on the number of crimes committed at night.

The report states "the program can only be considered an overwhelming success. Positive evaluations by the federal government have led to state funding of other similar programs."

The police report also mentions the University Health Services as a "valuable resource" in educating people about alcohol abuse. Seminars were held last year and are scheduled again this September to train area bar owners and bartenders.

Carlene Ricchelli of UHS said the training includes such topics as legislation, liability and stages of intoxication, and strategies for shutting off someone who has had too much to drink.

"I don't think anyone on campus can insist on drinking and driving. If you're going to drink, don't drive away from the front of the wheel," O'Neill said.

"We've seen too many students killed as a result of drunk driving. I think every cop on has witnessed this," he said. "It's not very nice when we have to deal with the aftermath."

Warning: Tough new penalties enacted for driving while drunk

On Sept. 1, a new law, recently signed by Massachusetts Governor Edward King, went into effect mandating tough penalties for drunk driving. The penalties, to be decided in court, range from a fine and enrollment in an alcohol education course to possible jail terms for repeated offenders.

First Offense: (if there are no injuries)
30 day suspension of license
$100 to $1,000 fine
court can order attendance of an alcohol abuse program, at a cost to the offender of $400

First Offense: (if injuries)
imprisonment for up to two years
loss of license for one year
fine up to $1,000

Second Offense within six years; (anyone who has presently been convicted or attended an alcohol abuse program is not considered a first-time offender.)
mandatory confinement of seven days in jail or 14 days in a residential alcohol treatment center - judge decides how much of the center's costs are paid by the state
two year loss of license
$300 to $1,000 fine

Third or Subsequent offense:
mandatory 60 days in jail
five year loss of license
$500 to $1,000 fine

Causing death: (considered a felony)
mandatory minimum sentence of one year, can be extended by the judge to 10 years
10 year loss of license
$5,000 fine

Bars repeatedly found to have disorderly persons leaving will be considered public nuisances and can be closed for a year.

Car crash kills 3 UM freshmen on Amherst road

By KEN LUNDBERG
Collegian Staff

Three University of Massachusetts students of the Class of 1986 scheduled to begin classes this semester were killed instantly last Wednesday night when their car struck a utility pole near the Mill Valley Bridge on Rte. 116.

The three victims, all 20-years-old, were Patrick C. Farmer of 20 South Whitney St., Amherst; Meg J. Dolan of North Quincy; and Brigitte A. Judge of Minneapolis, Minn. Farmer, the driver of the vehicle, was to be a freshman at the University and both Dolan and Judge reentering students.

Associate Medical Examiner Donald Abel said the possibilities of the fatal crash being drug or alcohol related will not be known until autopsies for the bodies of the three victims, found dead at the scene have been completed.

Amherst Police Chief Donald Maia said the bodies couldn't be pulled from the car until crews from both the Western Massachusetts Electric Co. and New England Telephone Co. arrived to secure the utility pole for Amherst firefighters who then cut the car open with the jaws of life.

The car, a Volkswagen Sirocco, was reportedly traveling at a high rate of speed, police said, before the driver lost control and struck the utility pole on the opposite side of the highway at about 8 p.m. No other vehicles were involved, police said.

Housing crunch to be lighter than expected

By SCOTT HERSEY
Collegian Staff

Despite predictions of an abnormally large freshman class entering the University of Massachusetts at Amherst this fall, UMass Housing Assignment Coordinator Jerald Quarles has said he is "not envisioning any major problems in housing for anyone who expects it."

UMass had originally received over 5,000 acceptance confirmations in the spring, Quarles said, but a combination of factors have resulted in only an "average midland to high" number of freshmen who will actually be looking for on-campus housing.

These factors included students deciding to attend other institutions, not getting the amount of financial aid required, not paying their fee bills and deciding not to attend any school at all during the fall, Quarles said.

For these reasons this year's freshmen class should only number about 4,000 students, instead of the original estimate of over 5,000, Quarles said.

"Housing is always tight in the fall," Quarles said. "But this year will be no different from any other in terms of space available."

Quarles said he expects approximately 400 people to be without housing when they arrive at UMass, most of them because of a late acceptance or not getting cleared for housing by the proper date.

UMass works under a system in which everyone who expects to live on campus must pay their bill or be cleared by the bursar's office by a certain date, or forfeit the housing assignment.

"We expect to take care of at least 150 underclassmen by the end of the first day," Quarles said, "and the rest of them after the Wednesday cut-off date for no-shows."

Anyone who has not claimed their housing by Wednesday automatically loses their assignment, Quarles explained, and these assignments are given to all freshmen and sophomores who are still without housing on Thursday morning.

Only after all underclassmen are taken care of will any juniors or seniors be given housing, Quarles said.

"There are two reasons for this," Quarles explained, "one is because of the University rule requiring all underclassmen to live on campus, and the other because freshmen have a lower cope level than someone who has been here before."

"Everyone who needs on-campus housing should expect to be taken care of within two and a half weeks, most before that," Quarles said.

"All in all I expect it to be a relatively normal hectic year," Quarles said.

Theta Chi loses charter after Greek Affairs review

By SCOTT HERSEY
Collegian Staff

The Theta Chi fraternity at the University of Massachusetts will no longer be an active campus fraternity after a summer decision by University officials to suspend the group's charter for two years, UMass Director of Housing Services Joseph Zannini said recently.

The decision to suspend the charter was made by Zannini on the basis of a recommendation by UMass Director of Greek Affairs Leslie Chambers and the results of a hearing with members of the fraternity, the Theta Chi Alumni Corportion and the Theta Chi national organization.

"The final decision was cooperative action between the University and members of the national and the Alumni Corporation," Zannini said.

The decision was made after the review of a 15-point plan drawn up last winter between members of the fraternity and University officials. The plan included stated objectives in all aspects of fraternity life, according to Chambers, and the decision to suspend the groups charter was made after deciding that the fraternity had not met these stated objectives.

After the two year period, members may apply to return to active fraternity status, Zannini said, but they must undergo the entire colonization process as if they were starting an entirely new fraternity.

Harold Alter, executive director of the national Theta Chi organization, said that his group has no plans to activate the fraternity after the two year period, but will examine the possibilities after the period is over.

In the meantime, the Theta Chi Alumni Corp., which owns the house, has rented the space to the Alpha Delta Phi fraternity, which was evicted from its former location in Fraternity/Sorority Park last spring in order to make room for a new group who will be living in the former house.

"As long as they act accordingly we have no problems with their renting the house," said Harold Lewis, executive director of the Theta Chi Alumni Corp., "but with the first report of their acting up, they will go too."

"We want the fraternity to come back and be a worthwhile member of the community," Lewis said.

The University Tower Library, which may be reopened next year under a renovation plan now before the state.

Library renovations considered for funding

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Correspondent

A proposal for a covered walkway and other renovations needed to fully reopen the Tower Library in late 1983 is still under consideration by the state's Division of Capital Planning and Operation (DCPO).

The Tower Library was closed on Sept. 5, 1979, because chips of bricks falling from the library posed a potential danger to students. The library was later reopened on a limited basis but most of the commonly used facilities and books were transferred to the Goodell Library building.

H.J. Littlefield, Director of Planning for the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, said the University's top priority is no longer repairing the spalling problems of the library's brick facade, but instead seeks to reopen the library to full capacity to allow time for more careful consideration of the problems.

Littlefield said the walkway will allow full access to the library. Because exits on the first floor are no longer useable, fire regulations permit only 750 students to use the tower at one time.

Other renovations will include moving the circulation facilities to the first floor of the tower, improvements to the elevator system, relocation of library offices to the fourth floor and installation of multi-tier shelving and study areas on the second and fifth levels. Multi-tiering allows additional shelf space on these double-level floors.

Littlefield said that work to correct the spalling problem will not begin until University officials can be certain that the work will not cause more serious problems in the brick facing. The walkway and other work will allow the library to reopen before and during work on the outside walls.

He said the proposal was sent to DCPO in the spring and a response is expected within a few weeks.

Tony Crayton, director of the Office of Third World Affairs, will be leaving Oct. 1 for a new job.

Crayton off to Boston; students feel the loss

By JEFF ROSENBERG
and HANNAH HOSOM
Collegian Staff

Tony Crayton, director of the Office of Third World Affairs at the University of Massachusetts will be leaving at the end of the month for a position at the Greater Boston Legal Services.

Crayton has been active on the UMass campus for several years working on issues of repression. He has directed the Office of Third World Affairs for the last three years. The office advises, advocates and serves as a resource center for Third World students.

"You have got to give the man a whole lot of credit. When he spoke people would listen and definitely change. He can definitely communicate a very hard issue like racism," said Adrian Crum, SGA Speaker's assistant and Third World caucus chair. "He will be a very hard act to follow."

Crayton has been a driving force on campus, speaking at rallies and lecturing to various groups, as well as contributing pieces to the Collegian. He spent much of his time solidifying Third World organizations both financially and organizationally. He said he feels his work has been "very successful in trying to bring Third World students and white students closer together rather than farther apart."

"There is no doubt as to the impact he has made in terms of making the campus aware of the concerns of Third World students," said Randy Donant, Director of the Division of Student Affairs.

"His ulterior motives were to constantly keep in mind, and remind the majority of the population about concerns like the quality of education and social rights issues, and I think he did an excellent job," Donant said.

"Very few people have shown the commitment toward students that Tony has," said Student Government Association Presiden' Jim Murphy.

"He's one of the most charismatic people on campus," Crum said. "He is a genius in his own right. He knows so many things about everything, especially African culture. He has such a very large wealth of knowledge, and he's leaving behind a lot of it for the students."

Crum noted that this is the first year the Undergraduate Student Senate will be dealing with Third World issues, including a poster campaign dealing with human oppression.

"He made a very great contribution to the University as a whole, in making people understand Third World issues enough so they can deal with it," Crum said.

Express add/drop available today

By HANNAH HOSOM
Collegian Staff

An "express add/drop" will be held from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom today in an effort to facilitate the beginning-of-semester rush for classes.

"This way students can drop any course easily, and we will deliver them (add/drop forms) to the departments. We are trying to get those who want to drop them early," said James W. Shaw, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, in an effort to clear spaces for students trying to get into classes.

Any class may be dropped, and twelve departments will have representatives there to sign add forms: Botany, COINS (computers), Communication Studies, Economics, English, History, Journalism, Microbiology, Philosophy, Political Science, Sociology and Spanish.

"We're hoping it's not too crowded in there. It should save people some grief; it'll be like a mini-University," Shaw said.

The event is being sponsored by the Registrar's Office and the College of Arts and Sciences Information and Advising Center (CASIAC). CASIAC advisors will be there also to answer any questions.

A list of open courses will be available there, and a complete listing is taped in the lobby of Machmer Hall and updated at regular intervals.

State Senate increases University budget

By KEVIN BOWE
Collegian Staff

The normally chaotic University of Massachusetts budget process was further complicated this year by the role of the newly created Board of Regents. But the unexpected result will mean the hiring of additional faculty for the first time in many years.

Under the final budget appropriation, UMass will be able to hire an estimated 20 additional faculty members, according to Rosmarie Strother of the Office of Planning and Budget. The additional faculty will be hired in areas of high demand such as engineering, business and the new writing program, she said.

Strother said faculty will not be hired for new teaching posts but will fill existing positions that were left vacant over the years because of past budget constraints.

Strother said UMass-Amherst will receive $109.3 million for the general maintenance of the campus, $950,000 for new library acquisitions, and $1.8 million for aid for disadvantaged students.

In the past UMass made its budget recommendations directly to the governor, who made his recommendation to the Legislature, and the Legislature allocated money directly to UMass.

This year, however, UMass made its recommendations to the Board of Regents, which lumped the UMass budget together with all other public college budgets, and submitted the budget request to the governor.

Legally, the Regents only had to submit one figure to the Governor and Legislature for all twenty-seven public universities and colleges. But because individual legislators representing particular schools wanted to ensure their school receives a fair share of the Regent's lump sum budget, the Regents were politically obliged to provide documents outlining how much each school would receive.

After the budget was passed by the Legislature and signed by the governor, the Regents were mandated to provide to the House of Representive's, and Senate Ways and Means Committees a breakdown of each institution's budget.

The House Ways and Means Committee approved the Regents request to fund the Amherst campus at $108.5 million, but the Senate Ways and Means Committee refused to accept this amount because of over-enrolled majors in various parts of the university. A compromise was sought.

SGA has busy summer dealing with many issues

By HANNAH HOSOM
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association (SGA) of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst works on issues that affect students and helps organize political and cultural events.

During the summer of 1982, the SGA was involved with a variety of activities ranging from introducing new students to campus to lobbying for tuition waivers.

More than 600 first year students responded to a mailing conducted by the Undergraduate Student Senate speaker's office. The mailing was evolved to "facilitate a better understanding of what the SGA is all about," according to a memo from Speaker Sharon Davies.

The SGA also formed a committee for the first time to be involved with the First Week Planning, a series of events scheduled during both days and evenings of the week students return to campus. A listing of events will be posted in the dormitories, as well as today's Collegian.

John Duff, Chancellor of Higher Education, recommended the Board of Regents allocate an additional million dollars to the 28-school state system. The Regents passed the proposal and the money is waiting to be allocated. The SGA was instrumental in the student lobbying which preceded this decision.

In production this summer was the 1983 edition of "On the Other Hand," the Course and Teacher Evaluation Guide (CATE). The booklet is the result of campus-wide class questionnaires being organized and tabulated by the communications division of SGA. It will be available this fall for choosing courses next spring.

The Women's Issues Team has been continuing its work on a Sexual Harrassment Grievance Procedure. According to Davies, the issues team, the SGA president's office and the Legal Services Office have agreed on a draft for the procedure. The Massachusetts Society of Professors is working on their own version and both will be combined into one by the Acting Assistant to the Chancellor Louis Fischer. New Chancellor Joseph Duffey should be presented with the final version in October, to authorize it for implementation this fall.

The Five College system offers many learning options

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Correspondent

Students at the University of Massachusetts are eligible to take courses at any of the schools in the Five-College system, which includes Smith, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke and Amherst Colleges.

Over 2500 students took advantage of Five-College cooperation in the spring of 1982, according to James W. Shaw, associate dean and director of the College of Arts and Sciences Information and Advising Center (CASIAC).

Attending UMass last semester were 815 students from the other four colleges in the region and 671 UMass students went to the other schools.

Shaw said the Five-College system technically permits students to take courses through the program if there are no similar courses on the student's campus, but said the rule is not strictly enforced.

"We try to interpret that very liberally," he said.

Students take courses at other colleges for a number of reasons, according to a December, 1981 survey on Five-College cooperation. A "different course perspective" is the most common reason, according to the report, but students also use the program to expand on major department work, to gain exposure to another school, or other students, and just to "get away."

Students participating in the survey generally felt that UMass and Hampshire College offered more classes "relevent to current social issues" and indicated that UMass was said to have the most intimidating and least attractive campus.

Academics aren't the only part of Five-College cooperation, however. Students can take advantage of free or discounted access to concerts, lectures and conferences at other colleges, and use the Five-College bus system which links the five campuses.

Students seeking more information about Five-College courses should contact Daphne Reed, UMass Five-College Advisor, at 545-2191.

More CC conferences could result in no fee increase

By MIKE FOLEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts is into the conference business in a big way.

"We have had a very busy summer," said Ashoke K. Ganguli, director of Auxiliary Services which oversees Conference Services. "I feel very good about Conference Services. It has come a long way since 1979."

"We have undertaken a marketing campaign and we are actively going after new clients," said R. Marc Fournier, sales and program coordinator for Conference Services. "We can see we've had some success. We have new clients and new revenue."

Ganguli said the total profits for conferences held this summer have not been added up yet. But profits for previous years have financed $775,000 of renovations in the Campus Center, in addition to increasing income at the Campus Center Hotel and restaurants, he said.

There were 47 conferences scheduled in July and August. The largest conference was an international convention of polymer scientists with more than 2,000 in attendance.

Conferences are scheduled throughout the year, with about 13 this month.

"Our market segment is all academic, scientific and union related," said Ganguli.

Ganguli said the conference business benefits the whole campus and the surrounding area by filling hotels and bringing in business in the slow summer months.

The Campus Center charges fees for the use of conference rooms as well as taking profits from the sales of retail goods, food and accomodations. Last year the Campus Center was paid $57,000 in fees and for small repairs to the building, Ganguli said.

More money for the Campus Center Fee as a primary source of revenue for the building.

Craig Freedman, finance coordinator for the Campus Center/Student Union/Board of Governors (BOG), said "Conferences are one of the sources of income in the Campus Center."

"The money could be used to reduce the Campus Center Fee or textbook prices could be lowered," he said.

The BOG will be negotiating with auxiliary services to raise the fees charged for conference space in the Campus Center, Freedman said.

"We can't charge so much that it hurts Auxiliary Services," Freedman said, "but there is a lot of leeway for (the fees) to go much higher."

UMass education professor dies during basketball game: age 43

By NANCY GONTER
Collegian Staff

Associate professor of education Douglass R. Forsyth, 43, died August 18 after he suffered a heart attack while playing basketball at the Mill River Recreation Area in Amherst.

Born January 27, 1939, in North Tonawanda, New York, Forsyth was the son of Robert and Viola Forsyth of Fort Myers Beach, Florida, and Lake Wyola in Shutesbury.

Forsyth graduated from Bucknell University in Lewisberg, Pennsylvania, in 1960.

He served as a first lieutenant in the U.S. Army adjutant general's corps.

After completing his military service, Forsyth earned a doctorate in psychology at Colorado State University in Fort Collins.

He moved to Amherst 14 years ago and joined the University of Massachusetts Counseling Center.

From 1973 to 1976, he served as assistant to former Chancellor Randolph Bromery. He then became an associate professor in the School of Education.

Besides his parents, he leaves his wife, Arlene (Kelley) Forsyth; a son, Mark; and a daughter, Kelley.

UMass to help forest industry

The new Cooperative Forestry Research Unit, begun in cooperation with the University and the state Division of Forests and Parks, will work toward solving forestry problems in Massachusetts by identifying and choosing those problems the University can work on.

The already active research program in the forestry and wildlife management program at the University will work in conjunction with state foresters to help landowners make their forests more profitable and strengthen industry in the state, according to Dr. Joseph D. Larson of the management program.

La Rochelle heads nursing studies

Dr. Diane LaRochelle took over the position of director of the graduate program of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst Division of Nursing last Wednesday.

LaRochelle earned her bachelor's and master's degrees at the University of Connecticut in nursing and a doctorate in higher education administration at the same university. She became an associate professor there, prior to her employment at UMass.

The Division of Nursing graduate program, reestablished this fall, gears students toward intensive community involvement with health care programs suited to the individual area.

Freshmen will be invited into UMass Honors Program

By BRIAN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

For the first time at the University of Massachusetts, 300 new students from this year's incoming freshman class have been invited to become part of the Honors Program.

Prof. Linda Lockwood, new director of the honors program, said the initial response to the change in policy, aimed at identifying talented students before they enter the University, was "very good." In addition to taking honors classes, these students will be placed in "learning corridors" in the dormitories.

Learning is a life-long process, Lockwood said.

"We must provide students with an arsenal of skills, a background of knowledge and the belief that it is fun to learn," she said.

The basic goal of the program will be "teaching students to teach themselves," Lockwood said. "This is the big idea that permeates my life," she said.

Lockwood said she believes that learning will not automatically happen; dialogues must be created between professors and students and it is often hard to do at a "mega-university."

"The honors program will encourage or insist upon dialogue, where students have to ask questions and have to question answers, where we look critically at our fundamental assumptions that the world is compartmentalized and linear. The honors program is legitimate turf for interdisciplinary inquiry. And interdisciplinary does not mean flimsy. It's the hardest kind of learning, to make creative connections," Lockwood said.

The new program will not supercede the present departmental honors programs but rather "feed into them." Lockwood said. She also hopes to reach the professional schools — engineering and business for example — and to open the program up to an even wider spectrum of University students who would push back the horizons of the program with their own new ideas, she said.

Conversing Coke machine adds new voice to UMass

By HANNAH HOSOM
Collegian Staff

When you're buying a Coke, and you've already put in the quarter and are fishing around for the rest of your change, you could hear something like this:

"Hi. I'm the talking Coca Cola vending machine."

No, it's not that wise-guy friend who's snuck up from behind. If you're in the Student Union, you are dealing with the real thing, a new voice at the University of Massachusetts, the talking Coca Cola vending machine.

Can't fnd that last nickel? Just try to get away with only 40 cents. It'll be kind of embarassing when the machine gently reminds you you're a bit short, while playing "Greensleeves" in the background.

Donated to the University by the Coca Cola Company, the machine is the first one to see use on a campus, according to Stan Parda of Coca Cola.

"There are only a half dozen in the area (western Massachusetts, Vermont and New Hampshire)," Parda said. "They're brand new. We're trying them out to help sales."

Parda said the Coca Cola Company will probably be developing more tapes for use in the future "so you don't have to listen to the same thing for the next ten years."

The new machine also reminds you to take your change, and thanks you.

The machine seems to be endowed with artificial intelligence. Word spread quickly of this strange machine put in last week. Knowing full well that the small crowd surrounding it was interested only in hearing it speak, it accepted money, spoke, played "Greensleeves," but refused to give out any sodas. It was soon made to realize, however, that although it is quite unusual, more was expected of it, and the problem was corrected.

Horse racing, games, and fun today at Three County Fair

By MIKE FOLEY
Collegian Staff

The 165th annual Three County Fair is in progress today in Northampton off Route 9.

Post time for the first of today's 10 horse races is at 1:30 p.m. and the "New Brass" polka band will be swaying the crowd by 7 p.m.

The Three County Fair, which began on Friday, continues through Sunday. It is one of the oldest fairs in the country and features many traditional events and contests.

Also today, there will be a lumberjack show, a "stars on ice" show, folk singer Andy May and a WHPM-sponsored grease pole climb and egg drop concert.

In addition to the scheduled events, the Three County Fair is packed with carnival amusements and games of chance.

The best Dahlia and best Gladious grown in the county will be chosen tomorrow. In the exhibition hall, all sorts of baked goods will be lined up begging for first prize. Decorated cakes will be singled for special hours in the Youth Hall. Holstein cattle will be lined up outside waiting to be awarded best of breed. Crowing cocks will be judged on the quality of their voices.

Horse racing is part of the fair's 165-year-old tradition, with 10 races every day.

On Thursday, a deserving culinary artist will win first prize for a perfect American apple pie. Hefty horses will pull loads of 2,900 lbs. and 3,200 lbs. Jersey, Brown Swiss and Aryshire Cattle will be groomed for competition. The most impressive vegetable will be picked in the Youth Hall. The Bill Anderson show will be featured in the grandstand.

On Friday, sheep will be judged and there will be a horse drawing free-for-all.

On Saturday, oxen will be admired, Shorthorn Guernsey cows will be [illegible] there will be an oxen drawing free-for-all.

On Sunday, it's rabbits, an oxen and steer show and Cherrie Ann LeBlanc playing on the midway.

"The University has the necessary resources to deal with problems involving human relations," Ingle said. More coordination is needed, he said. "One hand didn't know what the other hand was doing," he said.

The Office of Human Relations is not a crisis center but rather a troubleshooting center which will replace the University's nine-year-old Resource Network. Both Davis and Ingle will continue their work at the Resource Network identifying institutional problems which effect students, and bring people together to solve them, he said.

The new office cannot mandate University policy changes but can be an effective force in bringing various groups together, said Davis.

A victims assistance poster is being printed which will list the campus's 50 organizations where a victim of harrassment or abuse can turn to for help.

The poster will list where victims of racial harassment or gay oppression can turn to for help during a crisis, for counseling, education, training, and advocacy.

A faculty conference is also planned for Nov. 11 to explore ways in which human relations can be integrated into the school's curriculum. It will also try to sensitize the University to the problems in human relations, Davis said.

Student completes cross-country skate trip

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

For one University of Massachusetts student, the summer was filled with a series of ups and downs — literally.

Leslie Hellman, a senior Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration major, spent two and one-half months travelling some 3,250 miles in 12 states atop a pair of roller skates. His trip took him from Portland, Oregon, to Boston.

Hellman's trip, dubbed the "Great Skate" raised about $14,000 for the cancer society and provided Hellman with a look at the country few people get a chance to experience.

"I think every student should go out and do something like this," said Hellman, 22, a Worcester native. "You get to see it close...in college, you only see things from a distance."

Averaging 60 miles per day, Hellman, who was followed in a car by his twin sister, Lisa, a UMass graduate, appeared on many local radion and television newscasts and on the pages of newspapers in many of the communities he passed through. This exposure, he said, led him to meet many people and helped make the trip more pleasant.

"People would see you on the road and stop to talk," he said. "We stayed with 20 people who we didn't even know. We were like the king and queen of their house."

Such hospitality was welcomed by Hellman who often struggled to skate through difficult terrain and weather. He said he wore through three sets of skate wheels, which were replaced when worn down to about half their original size. Some western roads, he said, often slowed him down to a snail's pace.

"You're skating on rocks. You fall a couple of times going 10 miles per hour and get up and keep going," he said.

More often, however, Hellman went much faster, particularly when travelling over hilly roads. On one occasion, he said, a police officer used a radar gun to clock Hellman doing 52 miles per hour down a steep hill.

Not all local police officers were as cooperative, however. While skating down Route 12 near Lake Geneva in Wisconsin, one patrolman stopped Hellman and ordered him off the roads. Then, to make sure the skater left, he drove Hellman to the state line.

"He was going to give us a $43 ticket," but settled for a warning, Hellman said.

One highlight of his trip, Hellman said, was meeting actor Dan Ackroyd who was filming a movie on location in Detroit. Hellman also spoke to a gathering of 3,000 people in Chicago's Daly Center and was presented with the keys to the city in Albany, N.Y., and his hometown, Worcester.

"The greatest thrill of all had to be coming into Boston," he said. "I had a state police escort coming in. People were just going wild. It's an incredible feeling."

The entire trip wasn't always exhilarating, however. Hellman said he often felt depressed at the hard work and hours of boredom, but never thought of giving up.

"It just does a job on your mind sometimes. You go through incredible depressions where you think no one cares. But you keep going and you come out of it and think, 'hey, I've got the whole world in my hands,'" Hellman said.

"Physically, it was brutal," he said. "My knees hurt a lot. I had to do a lot of stretching. I had blisters the first couple of weeks."

For his efforts, Hellman was named a chairman on the American Cancer Society's Massachusetts campaign and has been invited to speak at many meetings and luncheons throughout the area. A job offer from a skate company may also follow.

Next year, Hellman said, he would like to try a trip again, this time with a team of skaters in Europe. Judging from his experiences this summer, he expects future trips will be as exciting as the first.

"I learned how fortunate I am to have a lot of things and for my dreams to come true I have to work for them," he said.

The annual UMass housing scramble

Off campus rents increase

The beginning of school always brings hundreds of trucks, trailers and other vehicles to Amherst, each loaded with student belongings. Here, a large truck is unloaded by Knowlton dormitory.

With higher rents and limited vacancies in Amherst, students living off campus have to be "deliberate about designing their living situation," according to Joanne Levenson of the Off Campus Housing Office (OCHO).

Most rents have increased at least $300 per year since this past spring. Levenson said about half the apartments in the area are owned by absentee landlords, many of whom own complexes in other states.

"They don't care what people can afford. These apartments have to be as profitable as those in New York and Connecticut. When they raise the rents, they take in factors that don't apply to low-income people," Levenson said.

With over half the student population of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst living off campus, Amherst's already low number of vacancies become the most desirable living spaces. Increasing numbers of students have been looking for homes further from campus, Levenson said, and she encourages people to experiment with living in surrounding towns.

"Most people can't be within walking distance of campus," Levenson said. "This is a different lifestyle."

OCHO teaches part-time student interns to organize issues such as tenants' rights and to negotiate with other agencies, particularly in Amherst. A rental listing is provided, as are a roommate matching service, tenant counseling and arrangement of leases.

A survey done by Project Pulse (of the Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office) found that something like 83 percent of students living off-campus use this office," Levenson said.

"In addition to our rental listing service, we have what other agencies don't have — a real strong counseling service," she said. Levenson said the office does not charge for its services, since it is funded with student money from the Student Activities Fee through the Commuter Collective.

OCHO is also involved with maintaining community relations and tries to change negative stereotypes area residents might have of student tenants. Levenson said students often unintentionally perpetuate these myths, as in the way some react when a landlord refuses to do repairs.

"It's easy (in that case) for students to get negligent. Neighbors complain to the Board of Health to have them evicted. It's something we've seen reproduced a lot," she said.

Dorms should open 'smoothly'

By HANNAH HOSOM
Collegian Staff

Although some students may have housing difficulties during the first two weeks of school, the effort to place more than 11,000 students into dormitories has been "running smoothly," according to Housing Assignment Coordinator Gerald A. Quarles.

"There's always a certain area of grayness, and this year there's expected to be a still greater number of no-shows," Quarles said.

Students placed in temporary housing, or swing spaces, will have to wait at least a week before any changes can be made. Quarles said the 119 rooms for this purpose are filled at the beginning of every year. He noted that additional rooms have been reserved in the Campus Center Hotel in case of an emergency, but he does not foresee having to use them at all.

A dormitory census will be taken Wednesday night, possibly providing some openings on Thursday. Freshman, sophomores, and transfer students without housing would be given preference.

Beginning Monday, any student dissatisfied with housing can put a note on the swap board outside the housing office in Whitmore or sign up for the housing lottery.

"We are going to try not have swaps go down the first week," Quarles said, "so we can get our information straight."

Students interested in a swap should write down their addresses, phone numbers and dormitory preference. Participation in the lottery involves filling out a housing preference form to be reprocessed with other lottery forms as well as spaces on campus which were not taken.

The lottery will take place next Tuesday, and Quarles said if there is a great enough demand, a second lottery may be held.

Amherst offers many options for the hungry

By HANNAH HOSOM

Two unidentified women enjoy a lunch at the Classe' Cafe', one of the newer restaurants in Amherst.

Last Spring I was studying in my room, wishing I was anywhere in the world but here, when I heard an ad for a great vacation spot come on the radio.

"In the rolling foothills of the Berkshire mountains...quaint shops...the place to relax," it said. "Come out to Amherst."

fresh viewpoint, it is nice. And what's the first thing to do when one returns from a summer of ice cream and pizza? Go out to eat!

As for ice cream and pizza, the Amherst area has enough to satisfy all tastes. We do have some of the best "homemade": Steve Herrell's, with the "smoosh-ins" of M&M'S, Heath bars, raisins, you name it; Bart's, whose coffee oreo is the flavor I always get no matter how firmly determined I am to try something new; and Calvin's, who used to have the distinction of delivering to the dorms (!).

Pizza is made in about twenty different ways around here. Everyone has their favorite and will argue all the way to the phone if it's going to be delivered. If you're driving to get it, and you haven't decided which one yet, it could get worse. At any rate, pizza is definitely a matter of personal trial and error. Submarine sandwiches (grinder, whatever) fall into the same category.

There are, however, times when pizza is not quite what you're looking for. When Grandma arrives, the one who never eats off of anything but china unless it's a picnic, something else must be found. What follows is by no means a complete listing, nor a listing of just the "best!" This is a description of the ones you'll most likely hear about when you ask where to take the folks, and with the exception of one, they're all in Amherst (the other is close enough.) If you go to Northampton, it's a whole 'nother story...

Carbur's on Route 9 in Hadley comes first in the alphabetical listing. The menu is incredible. There's a tendency to read it, then forget that you are there to eat and have to start all over again. The names are cute (Lady Chatterly's Liver is an outstanding example), and must have been a riot to think up. Just about every combination you can think of in the way of sandwiches is available. The fudge cake for dessert is RICH. I have yet to try the more formal dining section. The atmosphere is earlier American. The tabletops have old newspapers shellaqued on top and the booths — also given tongue-in-cheek names — are separated by rough-hewn wood. It's fun.

Delano's on North Pleasant Street, Amherst's "main street," is also done with a lot of wood, but more in the Scandinavian tradition. Plants hang over the divider between the bar and the tables, some of which are kind of small, so try to get there early for a booth.

The food, again, is sandwiches, salad and some Italian dishes. They are priced rather reasonably, and their burgers, by the way, are some of the best. Delano's has a good veggie and dip tray — something you see a lot of in the area. For dessert, the carrot cake comes very highly recommended.

Judie's, also on North Pleasant, is done in a cafe style. Once again, many plants and white wood this time. There is a front porch for those who wish to watch passers-by, both in warm and cold weather.

The food is variations on classic French themes. Light popovers accompany most of the food. The salads are great, too. I tend to go there, however, for dessert and coffee. Fellow sweet-tooths will be in heaven. Fattening sundaes, cakes, rum balls (depending on the whim of the baker, more cakes..displayed on a cart on the side of the left-hand dining room. The coffee (and my father, who is something of a connoisseur, agrees) is terrific.

La Raclette is the new kid in town, located off of North Pleasant Street. Definitely French, definitely very elegant. I must admit I have yet to eat an entire meal there, but that's more for lack of money and force of habit in going to various other places a bit more affordable. Maybe when Mom and Dad come up...

Plumbley's Off the Common, located around the corner on Boltwood Walk, is class. Plain and simple class. Brunch is a biggie here and very enjoyable. After its glassed-in entrance and tasteful landscaping, the inside is not a let-down. It is very uncluttered, with its windows curtained by hanging plants. The protected porch is very nice, very impressive.

A word to the wise; the salads are huge. If you're thinking of a light meal and willing to risk the slightly higher price of salad on the menu, be prepared. That higher price is there for a reason, to pay for all those greens and things, the ranch dressing is the best, too. Plumbley's also serves things like quiche, burgers and more expensive meals.

The Pub, on N. Pleasant Street, is nice and very well-priced. Their big drawing card is nightlife, but for very casual eating, the Pub deserves mention.

Amherst also has Chinese food, for those interested in something a little different. Amherst Chinese Food and Hunan Garden Restaurant are the very local places for egg rolls, spareribs and mai tais.

All in all, it's worth it to try to talk your parents, relatives, or anyone else into going out to eat around here. When students do spend money on food, it better be worth it, and restaurants around here seem to know it. (And it tastes even better when someone else pays!)

A schedule for a week long happy hour

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

Most people spend their first couple of days at UMass running from long lines to longer lines to try and put together a schedule that will best suit their needs.

In an effort to assist these followers of the happy hour, I have devised a week-long schedule which allows the bleary eyed to see, at a glance, some of the options open to them in Amherst.

Sunday

The morning after the night before can often be tough on an empty stomach so Mike's Westview Cafe appears to be a wise selection for the afternoon. They have brought their lunch buffet back so that patrons can get something in their stomaches while watching football games on one of the two television sets and drinking three seven ounce Rolling Rocks for $1.25. The buffet now costs $1 but it is well worth the price.

On Sunday night, the noisier crowd congregates at the Time Out. Pitchers of beer are $3 and flow pretty easily especially after 10 p.m. when the early evening library crowd shows up to rehash the weekend gone by.

Monday

The first school day of the week is always the quietest for the party patrol. This makes Barsellotti's a good choice for happy hour since it has a very regular clientelle. The entertainment is at the pool table and on the television.

Monday night's social options can best be taken care of at the Drake. Football fans can watch the Monday night football extravaganza on the TVs downstairs while drinking fans can try different varieties of beer upstairs from the largest selection of imported and domestic beer in Western Massachusetts.

Tuesday

Tuesday will be a gamble day the first time around this year because when this schedule was being put together no official word was available on the happy hour at the Top of The Campus Lounge. In a way, it doesn't matter whether two for one is back from 2 to 6 p.m. every day because the view from the 10th floor is worth the elevator ride any day. (But having a four hour happy-hour again would be nice.)

The nod on Tuesday night goes to Poor Richards III for their 25 cent draft special. Dick's has blended some rock and roll into the music selection and at 25 cents a brew, the staunchest of disco haters will be on the dance floor in no time. Wallflowers also have entertainment in the form of a pooltable, some video games and a large-screen TV.

Wednesday

This is the most strategic pick of the week and for a very important reason. The big check mark goes next to the Charlie's advertisement because their happy hour (3-6 p.m.) has 2 for 1 drinks, free munchies and a location that enables you to drink, eat and keep an eye on your eventual Wednesday night nightspot.

The nightspot, the Pub, has the special, most famous in Amherst, Pub-mug Night. Crowds dropped off a little bit last year when the Pub started charging a higher cover than usual but the crowds are back. You have to own your own mug for this one and be careful with that mug (mugs have been known to develop feet when placed down and left unguarded). Jim Plunkett will not be back and there wasn't any definite word on what the entertainment would be (a deejay is a possibility) but whatever they offer, the crowd will be into it by 11 or 11:30 p.m. This isn't when to arrive (the line sometimes reaches the street) but it is when rowdiness takes over.

Thursday

An early-fall pick for the Thursday happy hour is Judie's. Thursday is a good day to get a table outside and watch everyone bustle past while enjoying half price on everything but selected bottles of wine and beer. The atmosphere alone is enough to impress, so if you want a pre-weekend date, here you are.

The Thursday nightscene is as varied as the people who live here during the school year, but a spot check of some reliable night-outers brought the name Delano's to the top of the Thursday night list. The happy hour is from 10 to 12 p.m. and features two-for-one drafts and house liquors. They will also have specials from week to week with two-for-one prices on such bottled beers as Molson Golden Ale, Beck's and the prime choice of anyone with enough money, Heineken. On top of all this, Delano's serves free pizza with drink purchases.

Friday

Friday, the mecca of the week-long-partier, has as its top pick (of course) the Blue Wall. The Wall has various specials going on and the line to get in starts at a little before 2 p.m. and stays somewhat steady for the duration of the afternoon. They have live entertainment which changes with each week and the crowds get very rowdy.

Friday divides up into special categories because those people on the meal plan head for the Dining Commons when the Blue Wall closes. Those who aren't should head out of the Wall a little early so that they can be in line at Mike's Westview Cafe when the food is served at 5 p.m. The free-lunch theory is practiced by Mike's to the fullest on Friday when they serve such delicacies as salad, macaroni, chicken wings and ham. As with the Sunday lunch buffet, there has been a $1 charge for food added that shouldn't slow anyone down from grabbing a huge plate of food (especially after a few of the $1.95 65 ounce pitchers of Old Milwaukee.

Friday night is an optional night (as is Saturday). Weekends can be split up into the Joey D's crowd (Joey D's is probably the hottest overall nightspot), Pub goers, Smith College and Mount Holyoke College travellers and off-campus partygoers. Friday and Saturday are a little-bit-of-everything nights and the choice is yours. (Kind of like an eat anything you want period when on a diet.)

Saturday

As mentioned previously, no nightspot will be recommended for Saturday night. This will also be the case with Saturday afternoon. Listen for after-the-football-game specials, they are always fun.

Of course, this is not a concrete schedule. There are still possibilities like the Lord Jeffrey's Inn, Plumbley's, The Hungry U and Dastardley Dan's to explore.

See you in the line for the men's room.

Sometimes, it seems like alphabet soup.

The myriad of letters, each cleverly disguising the name of an organization or agency, permeate life here at the University of Massachusetts. Everywhere you go, you are hit with a pile of letters and, more often than not, are left to your own devices to decipher their meanings.

While the real world has its FBI, CIA, KGB and AFL-CIO, UMass follows suit with such gens as SCERA, TIPS, SUB and RSO. To the unitiated, the seemingly nonsensical letter groups may seem like the products of a defective computer, but they are actually the key to survival here at the University. To help new students and reacquaint the veterans, we offer this brief explanation of exactly what these letters mean.

In the Whitmore Administration Building, the big white place which looks like a fort, almost every office has at least one acronym. The Dean of Students Office sponsors the IDB (Information Data Bank), which provides information on just about anything, and TIPS (Taped Information Phone Service) which people can call to hear tapes on a variety of subjects. Down the hall, in the FAO (Financial Aid Office) you can apply for a BEOG (Basic Educational Opportunity Grant), a HELP (Higher Education Loan Plan) loan, a GSL (Guaranteed Student Loan) or a NDSL (National Direct Student Loan).

Within the dozens of academic buildings, there often seem to be more acronyms than books, with such programs as BDIC (Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration) which allows students to design their own majors; CCEBS (the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students); BCP (the Bilingual Collegiate Program); UWW (University Without Walls), for non-traditional students; CASIAC (The College of Arts and Sciences Information and Advising Center); STEPC (Social Thought and Political Economy), a major for the highbrow types; HRTA (the school of Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration); and, of course, ROTC (Reserve Officers Training Corps), for the military types.

In the Campus Center and Student Union complex, a wide range of student organizations hide under various letters. There's the SGA (Student Government Association) which serves as the undergraduate students' governing body, providing money to many of the more than 400 RSO groups (Recognized Student Organizations); for free legal advice, students can turn to LSO (the Legal Services Office); Student Controlled Businesses (SCBs) are coordinated by EDO (the Economic Development Office); and then there's SCERA, (the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy) which studies and then lobbies around issues of concern to students.

And there's still more. UPC (Union Program Council) produces concerts; DVP (Distinguished Visitors Program) presents speakers; UVC (Union Video Center) provides cable TV (television) in the Campus Center and Student Union; and the BOG (Board of Governors) runs the Campus Center.

Even many of the campus buildings bear these strange names. The CC (Campus Center) is the focal point for many campus activities, with movies often shown in the CCA (Campus Center Auditorium). In the SUB (Student Union Building) there's another SUB (The Student Union Ballroom) which also hosts many movies, concerts and dances. Concerts can also be seen at the FAC (Fine Arts Center) and very few students pass through UMass without taking a course in the GRC (Graduate Research Center) or its big brother, the GTWR (Graduate Tower).

Just when you think you know all the acronyms there are, another will be invented. For those who want to keep up with it all, a good memory is needed. For those who don't care, don't worry. Just don't forget to go anywhere without your ID.

The Library System

The library system consists of Goodell Library, the 28-story University Library Tower, two science branch libraries, a music library, and several reading rooms. The card catalog is in Goodell, transferred there along with other library materials and services in 1979 after discovery of defects in the brick facade of the University Library Tower. Begin any library search in Goodell.

Goodell Library

Located opposite the Old Chapel, this library is between South College and Bartlett Hall. It contains the University library system card catalog; reference materials and staff; a book collection of about 75,000 volumes; all current periodicals in the social sciences and humanities, and backfiles since 1965 of 1,200 of these titles; more than 1,000,000 microforms; newspapers; a basic law collection; the most frequently used federal and state publications and the government documents office; the interlibrary loan, and library director's offices; course reserve materials; and about 400 study spaces.

University Library Tower

The Tower entrance is on the east side of the building, facing the campus pond. The Tower contains less heavily used material in the social sciences and humanities; the University archives; special collections and rare books; the library business office; and about 500 study spaces on the 26th floor and on the perimeter of book stack floors. It does not contain card catalog or reference services. The collection in the Tower is usually accessible to anyone with a UMass or other Five College photo ID or a resident borrower's card with a photo ID. Others should inquire at the desk at the Tower entrance.

Physical Sciences Library

Situated on the 2nd floor of the Graduate Research Center, the Physical Sciences Library includes materials in engineering, chemistry, mathematics, water resources, computer science, food technology, wood technology, physics, astronomy, and related fields.

Morrill Biological Sciences Library

Located on the 2nd floor of Morrill Science Center, this library contains biological and geological material.

Music Library

The Music Library, in Room 149 of the Fine Arts Center, houses books and journals relating to music and a noncirculating collection of thematic indexes, scores, and recordings, as well as music listening equipment.

Catalog Information

Card Catalog

The card catalog on the 5th floor entrance level of Goodell Library lists the book and journal holdings of the University library system, including branch libraries and reading rooms.

There are separate catalogs for archival materials and government publications. The card catalog is divided into two sections. The Author/Title catalog contains cards for names of persons and agencies considered to be authors of publications, as well as title cards for most works in the collection. The Subject Catalog contains cards indicating the subject areas of publications; to find the exact terms used, consult Library of Congress Subject Headings on tables near the card catalog.

Pioneer Valley Union List of Journal and Serial Holdings

This microfiche publication lists periodicals in the UMass system (Amherst, Boston, Worcester) and in other major collections in the Pioneer Valley alphabetically by title, with locations, call numbers, and volumes held.

The librarians at the Reference Desk in Goodell will gladly provide assistance in using these catalogs and in locating library materials and information.

Locating Books and Periodicals

Books and periodicals listed in the card catalog are arranged according to the Library of Congress classification scheme. Each item has a unique call number, a combination of letters and numbers, appearing on its label and on the upper lefthand corner of its catalog cards. The call numbers may also include special location designations, which show, for instance, whether a publication is in one of the branch libraries. However, the card catalog will not indicate whether a book or periodical is in Goodell Library or in the Tower; other records must be consulted for this information.

Books in Goodell

These are listed by call number in a red-covered, multivolume computer printout, on tables near the Reference Desk. Books are shelved on four levels, in the front of the building.

Books in the Tower

Books not listed by call number in the Goodell printout are in the Tower.

Periodicals in Goodell

Recent, unbound issues of all social sciences and humanities journals are shelved in the Current Periodical Room, Goodell 506. Backfiles of 1,200 selected titles are bound and shelved on the 2nd floor, three flights down the stairs near the card catalog. Some titles are in microformat; these are shelved in the Microforms Room, Goodell 410. Both bound and microform journals in Goodell are designated in the Pioneer Valley Union List by the location UMAS-UNIV and the phrase "volumes held since 1965 or later in Goodell"; they are also listed in a single blue-covered computer printout kept near the Reference Desk.

Periodicals in the Tower

All UMAS-UNIV periodicals not shown in the Pioneer Valley Union List or the blue-covered computer printout as being in Goodell are shelved in the Tower, in the book stacks.

Resources and Services

Archives

Located on the 25th floor of the Tower, this collection contains several groups of personal and historical manuscripts, as well as material related to the University of Massachusetts.

Art Collection

All art books and journals are shelved in a noncirculating collection on the 9th floor of the Tower. For hours of access check the schedule of library hours, available at the circulation desks.

Audiovisual Department

This department in Goodell 308 supports classroom instruction by distributing audiovisual equipment and films to faculty members, and by producing audiovisual instructional material for them. Enter from outside the building, at the southwest corner loading dock.

Audiovisual Reserve

On the 6th floor of Goodell, this section houses course-related audiovisual materials, and the necessary viewing and listening equipment.

Computer Search Service

Inquire at the Reference Desk, 5th floor entrance level of Goodell.

Computer Terminals

In the Tower, computer terminals linked to the University Computing Center are available for use on the 7th floor.

Five College Libraries

UMass students, staff, and faculty have direct borrowing privileges at the main libraries of Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke, and Smith Colleges. Material thus borrowed may be returned directly, or to Goodell Library.

Government Documents

This collection includes official publications of the United States, United Nations, and Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Most of these materials are not listed in the main card catalog, but are accessible through special indexes. Consult the documents librarians, Goodell 416, about the use of this collection.

Instruction in Library Use

Course-related library sessions are conducted for graduate and undergraduate classes, at the request of instructors; inquire at the Reference Desk, Goodell.

Interlibrary Loan

Faculty and graduate students may apply at the Reference Desk, Goodell, to obtain research materials not available in the University of Massachusetts library system. Undergraduates may use interlibrary loan service only for materials within the Valley area.

Library cards

UMass student, staff, and faculty IDs serve as library cards. Five College patrons and other Massachusetts residents seeking borrowing privileges should apply at the Circulation Office, Goodell 512.

Loan Period

Books circulate for four weeks. Unless they have been requested by another borrower, books may be renewed by mail (U.S. or campus), by phone (three-item limit per call), or in person at the library from which they were borrowed. Forms for book renewals are available at the circulation desk in each library. Periodicals do not circulate.

Recalls

Books are subject to recall after two weeks if requested by another reader, and at any time if needed for Reserve.

Reserve Books

Reserve materials circulate for time periods varying from two hours to several days. A photo ID is required to use these materials. They must be returned to the desk from which they were borrowed — in Goodell Library, to the Reserve Desk on the 6th floor, Goodell 615.

Book Returns

Books may be returned to the library from which they were borrowed or to Goodell Library. After hours there is a book deposit box at the Goodell entrance; do not use this to return Reserve books or interlibrary loans.

Law Collection

A core collection of noncirculating legal materials is shelved on the 2nd floor of Goodell and listed in a blue-covered computer print out available there and at the Reference Desk on the 5th floor.

Library Orientation Tours

Tours of Goodell and the Tower are given several times a day at the beginning of each semester, and at other times by appointment; inquire at the Reference Desk, Goodell.

Maps

A collection of approximately 100,000 sheet maps—geological and topographic, demographic, and historical—is housed in Room 269, Morrill Science Center.

Microforms

Microtext copies of newspapers, selected periodicals, government archives, and many other types of research materials are in the Microforms Room on the 4th floor of Goodell, along with reading and printing equipment.

Newspapers

Current issues of selected foreign and domestic newspapers are shelved in the Current Periodical Room, Goodell 506. Some backfiles of these and a number of other newspaper titles, are available in the Microforms Room.

Reference

The 5th floor of Goodell houses the noncirculating reference collection. Reference librarians are available most of the time the library is open to help in using this material and the card catalogs, as well as to provide many other kinds of assistance in making use of the library system.

Special Collections and Rare Books

Noncirculating rare and fragile materials, unusual editions, and individual manuscripts are kept in this area on the 25th floor of the Tower, and are made available for use in its reading room, Room 2563.

Northampton hustling and bustling in the 80's

By MIKE FOLEY
Collegian Staff

Northampton thrives.

Main Street paves its way between tree-lined sidewalks and buildings dating from the late 1800's and early 1900's. Benches and grassy greens invite pedestrians to linger in front of swanky shops, varied restaurants, coffee houses and ice cream parlors.

A few years ago Northampton was known only as the place where Smith College is located and President Calvin Coolidge served as mayor. Things have changed.

It seemed to happen all at once. As the rents in Amherst skyrocketed, students poured over the Calvin Coolidge Bridge for a more reasonable place to live. The buses came, and the sleek blue and white PVTA rolled up and down Main Street every 10 minutes. Thornes "a market place" with its five floors of more than 40 businesses burst into existence revitalizing an old boarded up warehouse at the corner of Main and South streets. Main Street sidewalks were spruced up with new brick and more trees. Downtown shops began dolling up their store fronts.

New businesses have added to an already rich assortment of things to do and see.

For a special afternoon, have a luncheon at Greenstreets Restaurant and step next door for a dip at the East Heaven Hot Tub as part of the bargain. Or read the Sunday paper at Bonducci's on Main Street while sipping a cup of cappuccino and watching the various characters stroll by. Or just stroll down Main Street yourself poking into the book stores, clothing and jewlery shops. Stop into The Grocery to experience a genuine New York style deli, or the Soup Kitchen for a soup and salad.

Northampton offers plenty of night time entertainment. The Pleasant Street Theater plays foreign and avant-garde films. The Academy of Music prides itself on artsy movies that are closer to main stream cinema, and the Calvin tries to provide current films at low prices.

There are many theater and dance groups that perform regularly in Northampton including ABIA, Presant Stage, Chrysalis Theater Eclectic, No Theater and Dance Gallery.

The recently expanded Sheehan's Cafe on Pleasant Street features live rock and jazz music, with room to dance. The Iron Horse on Center Street has jazz and folk music entertainment and a newly acquired license to serve liquor. Other favorite bars include Fitzwilly's, which is a quiet restaurant during the day and often described as a hopping pick-up joint at night, Packards on Masonic Street entertains a generally slightly older more serious crowd but can be pretty wild on a Saturday night and Hugo's, a walk down Pleasant Street where dim lighting, a good juke box and a pool table are considered the only things necessary for a good time.

For the morning after, Northampton offers an impressive selection of places to eat breakfast. The classic Red Lion Diner on Holly Street, the popular Jake's at the corner of Main and King streets, Meyer's on Pleasant street with it's large selection of pancakes, Barts, which serves waffles in the morning, and The Granery, which offers it up all natural.

Northampton, settled in 1654, cradled in a bow of the Connecticut river is only seven miles from Amherst and is an interesting alternative to wandering about the Campus Center concourse.

Students wishing to change their schedules have until September 21.

Even if a class you did not sign up for appears on your schedule, you are registered for that class and must fill out a drop form to be withdrawn from the class. The sooner a class is dropped, the sooner a student who might want to take it will be allowed in.

After September 21, until October 5, add/drops will be processed on a three-part course change form. Drops require the instructor's or departmental representative's signature and will be noted on the records as a "W". Adds must be authorized by a dean.

Students requiring any information should contact the appropriate office, or call the Information Data Bank at 545-1555. The office is open from 8:30 a.m. until 9 p.m. Monday through Friday and from 10 a.m. until 3 p.m. on weekends.

The Taped Information Phone Service (TIPS) is also very useful in providing answers to more commonly asked questions in most areas of concern. The number for TIPS is 545-1540 and each tape is assigned a number. A listing of these may be found in campus phone books, or outside the Dean of Students Office in 227 Whitmore.

Many student groups center to a wide variety of interests

Mark Twain once warned that you should never let your schooling interfere with your education and hundreds of University of Massachusetts students seem to have taken his advice.

Each day, many students devote their free time to learning, outside the classroom, with practical hands-on experience in any number of fields through the more than 400 Recognized Student Organizations (RSO groups) at UMass.

Administered by the RSO office on the fourth floor (balcony level) of the Student Union Building, the groups vary in size from the minimum 10 members to several hundred. For those interested in music, one of the largest groups, the Union Program Council (UPC) offers students experience in all phases of concert promotion, including talent booking, finances, publicity, stage crew and security.

For the more adventurous, there are a myriad of sporting organizations, including the Outing Club, which provides camping equipment to its members for a low fee; the flying club, where you can learn to fly at a fraction of the normal cost; and the sport parachute club, where the real daredevils get high.

Many RSO groups also compliment your major. This newspaper, the Collegian, gives journalism students and others hands-on training in all facets of newspaper production, including newswriting and reporting, advertising sales and financial management, photography and graphic arts. There are also many clubs for students studying foreign languages and even a business club for entrepenurial types.

For most every student, there's no need to be bored at UMass. Check the pages of the Collegian for announcements or go to the RSO offie for information on groups. Get involved; it's both fun and practical.

As energy costs continue to rise, many facilities in the Five College area are updated to make better use of energy resources. At this Hampshire College arts building, solar panels have been installed on the roof to provide inexpensive heat.

The un-plain difference in a Sero* white Purist* button-down is easy to see.
The oxford is softer, cleaner, more "oxford."
And the Purist* collar is simply like no other. With a definite bell-shape roll and a strong, confident flair.
And there's certainly nothing plain about the tailoring. The shirt is made today in the same painstaking manner it was made 35 years ago.
But why white? It is great for a change of pace, particularly when it's a Sero un-plain.

It's not that hard to find your own studying spot

By MIKE FOLEY
Collegian Staff

Sometimes finding a good place to study can be as tricky as a physics problem or writing the first paragraph of an important essay. But with a little diligence success is certain.

Explore!

There are a thousand nooks and crannies both on campus and about the Valley. One may be your ideal place where the creative juices flow and the muses sing.

Some students need a hard chair and a clear desk surrounded with blank walls and only the hum of a flourescent light to keep them company. Others can't think straight without the buzz of human commotion around them or a pop beat blaring out of an FM radio.

Whether you must allow yourself conversation with a friend between pages and an occasional vocal burst of frustration, or you want a comfortable chair with good light and no distractions, you should be able to find the right spot.

The Goodell Library and the University Library Tower are the center of a library system at UMass that includes five libraries. Goodell with 400 study spaces is quieter with isolated stalls around the stacks, comfortable chairs grouped around low tables on the first floor and an impressive if sometimes distracting view of the Pioneer Valley from the 26th floor.

There is a physical sciences library on the 2nd floor of the Graduate Research Center. On the 2nd floor of the Morrill Science Center, located across North Pleasant Street by the Campus Pond is the Morrill Biological Science Library.

The Music Library, in room 149 of the Fine Arts Center, is pleasant and little used. You can listen to your favorite classical music with ear phones while you prepare for an exam.

Many people find the atmosphere in the Hatch Cafeteria in the Student Union Building good for studying, where no one minds if you spend more time discussing politics and drinking coffee than actually reading the book in front of you.

Next to the Hatch is the Commuter Lounge. The couches are often used for cat naps between classes and the tables for groups studying together.

Students often venture up to the eighth and ninth floors of the Campus Center hunting for empty conference rooms. But don't leave a mess behind or you may find all the doors locked the next time.

Another favorite spot in the Campus Center is the Music Listening Room off the concourse across from the Blue Wall. It is often overcrowded with errant scholars sprawled on the floor. A wide variety of modern music is available for your listening pleasure.

A few students can usually be seen across the way in the Blue Wall with a plastic cup of beer amidst their papers.

There are hundreds of classrooms around the campus and it's usually easy to find one unlocked and not in use.

There are comfortable couches in Memorial Hall next to the Old Chapel in the center of campus.

The Newman Center at the corner of North Pleasant Street and Massachusetts Avenue has its own library and a cafeteria which is seldom crowded.

Study areas can also be found in many of the domritories. If you live on campus they may be the best places to go when your roommate goes to sleep and you must study on into the night.

If nothing on campus suits your fancy, hop a bus downtown and check out the Jones library or the spacious and comfortable library at Amherst College.

Students living off campus may find it most convenient to study at any one of the five college campuses. At UMass identification allows you to take out books at any of the five college libraries.

Whether your interests are politics, pottery-making, hang gliding or reading science fiction, there's an RSO group to suit your interests. And, if you can't find one you like, you can even start your own group.

Look for that special studying place. Your efforts are sure to be rewarded.

As students return to the Five College area, moving furniture and other belongings becomes a major event. At Hampshire College last week, one student made ample use of his compact car.

Local theaters make you laugh, scream and cry

By ANDREW GORDON
Collegian Staff

We live in an area which places a great amount of emphasis on the arts; and film is not withstanding. Movie buffs can look foreward to a good semester of fine films, on-campus and off.

The AMC theaters are the place to see commercial films. The Hampshire 4 (584-7550) and Mountain Farms 4 (584-9153), located in the Hadley malls, both offer first-run motion pictures for $2.50 with a student discount card available at the box office. The Hampshire 4 also shows midnight movies every Friday and Saturday night for $3. This weekend they are running The Warriors, Dawn of the Dead, The World According to Garp and The Rocky Horror Picture Show.

The manager of the Hampshire 4 said he is hoping to put together a midnight "package," where each screen would have a certain type or genre of film: comedy, horror, musical (Grateful Dead, Quadrophenia), and classics. Campus favorites such as Altered States, Apocalypse Now and the Three Stooges will very possibly appear sometime during the semester.

The area also has a good number of art and revival houses. The Amherst Cinema, located on Amity Street near the center of town, runs two different double-features a week (Sunday-Tuesday, Wednesday-Saturday). They are beginning the semester with a great double-feature of The Atomic Cafe and Between The Lines; which begins tomorrow and will run through the 11th. From the 12th through the 14th they have Blood Wedding and the ballet film The Children of Theatre St., Madame Rosa and Hester St. will run from the 15th through the 18th and the 19th brings us Til Marriage do us Part and The Story of Sin.

"Apocalypse Now," the Vietnam War movie which features this climactic river patrol scene, is one of many films which will be shown at midnight this semester at the Hampshire 4 theaters.

Actor William Hurt in the throes of a psychedelic experience in the film "Altered States," soon to be featured in a midnight show at Hampshire 4 theaters.

The Academy of Music (584-8435), in Northampton, is one of the finer theaters around. Physically beautiful, the theater offers an interesting assortment of revivals, foreign and independent features. Through Thursday they will be showing the wonderful film Diner. From the 10th through the 16th they have a Stanley Kubrick double-feature of Dr. Strangelove and A Clockwork Orange. From the 17th through the 23rd they will be showing Some Like it Hot and La Cage Aux Folles (the original) and on September 24th they will be premiering the fantastic French film, Diva.

The Pleasant St. theater (586-5828) is the prime art house, showcasing foreign and independent films. The French film Smash Palace will run through the 14th. On the 15th they have Marianne and Julianne and the 22nd bring the area premiere of Mephisto, 1982 Academy award winner for best foreign film.

The Calvin theater (584-2310) recently underwent a change in management and will begin a new policy format this month. They will run weekly double-features for $2.50, with a Sunday double-feature from $1. A Herzog double-bill, Kaspar Hauser (the film, not the group) and Aguirre, Wrath of God, will run from the 10th through the 16th, followed by King of Hearts and Women in Love from the 17th through the 23rd. On September 24th, for one week, the theater will show Annie Hall and Manhattan. Owing to its large size, the Calvin will presumably begin showing more commercial films as the semester rolls on. The Calvin, Academy of Music and Pleasant St. theaters are all accessible by the Northampton PVTA bus which leaves every fifteen minutes or so from the Campus Center horseshoe.

Movies will, of course, be showing on campus all the time. Dorms, frats and other recognized student organizations sponsor films, which play at the Campus Center auditorium, Mahar auditorium and the Student Union Ballroom. Priced around $1 to $1.50, this month will bring Missing to the CCA tonight, Dr. Strangelove tomorrow and Animal House, at Mahar, on Thursday. What Do You Say to a Naked Lady? will play at Mahar on the 16th, Jaws at the CCA on the 18th and A Clockwork Orange and On the Waterfront on the 23rd and 29th, respectively.

Levenson suggested students make an effort to get to know their neighbors, particularly in apartment complexes.

"If you're going to have a party, tell the neighbors," she said. "They'll be less apt to call the police."

Levenson said that moving out of dormitories brings many new responsibilities which too many people don't bother to consider seriously. OCHO can be used to find a home, but the office does not do all the work or even guarantee a place to live.

"Students assume they will get bumped out of courses, or have difficulty finding a job. They underestimate finding a home. We don't think it should be provided. People have to expect responsibilities," Levenson said.

Start every day refreshed!

UMass football enters its 100th year

A veteran backfield will charge the offense

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

The 100th season of football at the University of Massachusetts kicks off this weekend against West Chester State with high hopes that a veteran offensive unit will be able to put a lot of points on the Minuteman side of the scoreboard.

Leading the attack will be senior superback Garry Pearson, a 5'11", 185 pound tailback from Bristol, Connecticut who already holds the career rushing mark at UMass with a three year total of 2228 rushing yards.

"I just hope we can live up to being a typical UMass football team and hope we can play well enough that our schedule doesn't end on November 20, although we're certainly not looking past September 11.

Outstanding? Pearson finished last season as the number one all-purpose runner in the nation (NCAA I-AA) and was fourth in the nation in rushing. He averaged 175.6 yards per game as an all-purpose rusher (rusher, receiving, kickoff returns and punt returns) and 114.0 yards per game rushing. He averaged 5.0 yards per carry while amassing 1026 yards over nine games during 1981.

For these efforts, Pearson was named to the Associated Press second All-American team, he was a first team Kodak-Coaches All-American, a first team AP All-New England pick, a first team United Press International All-New England choice and a unanimous choice to the All-Yankee Conference team.

According to the rules of football, Pearson is allowed on the field against opponents with ten teammates to assist him. Hardly seems fair, especially when you consider that the supporting cast is not all that shabby either.

Tri-captain Tom Murray returns to his fullback position after gaining 250 yards and scoring five touchdowns last season. Murray is listed at 6'1" and 210 pounds. He was a second team All-Yankee Conference player last year.

The quarterback slot was potentially the most highly contested position this year with last year's original starting QB, Dean Pecevich, returning from a shoulder injury that sidelined him after the second game of the season and Barrett McGrath, Pecevich's replacement, both returning. But midsummer arkhroscopic surgery to McGrath has temporarily left him at less than 100 percent. When he is fully recovered there could be a battle for the fieldleader's spot, but for now the job belongs to Pecevich.

"Dean is doing an excellent job," said Pickett, "I'm really a one quarterback guy but I'm not going to say that I would rule out going with two if I had to."

This situation could make for a very interesting duel that will develop as the year progresses. Both players have shown that they are capable of running the Minuteman machine, but only one can be on the field at a time.

"Everyone always wants me to say something about Garry Pearson," said first year head coach Bob Pickett recently, "But I don't know what else I can say about him. He's just an outstanding player."

Whoever the quarterback is, when he drops back to pass he will have several good targets in the form of the aforementioned backs, tight end Gary Freker and, according to Pickett, "three excellent wide receivers."

Freker looks ready to make his presence felt on the playing field this season. This 6'4", 240 pound junior will be called upon to pick up the slack left by the graduation of Asa Hillard and Jay Caraviello.

I'M GLAD I DON'T HAVE TO WASH THESE CLOTHES — Tri-captain Jerry Gordon takes a breather during a game held at Alumni Stadium last year.

The wide receivers, all of whom will most likely see rotating action, will be Bob Simeone, whose brother Jim is an excellent freshman prospect at quarterback, Abraham Yacteen and John Jeffries.

Protecting the passer and, at other times, opening holes for Pearson, Murray and company will be a good-sized offensive line with more than its share of veterans.

The line will be led by senior tri-captain Jerry Gordon, a 6'1", 248 pound left guard who garnered second team All-Yankee Conference honors lat year. This is Gordon's second year as a Minuteman captain.

Playing at the other guard position will be a first team Yankee Conference and a third team AP All-New England player in 6'2", 250 pound Scott LaFond. Tony Pasquale, a two year starter and second team All-Yankee Conference selection will also be returning to the offensive line. Pasquale is 6', 240 pounds and very solid.

New faces in the starting offensive lineup will be senior Wilbur Jackson and sophomore Ken Runge. Jackson, who was converted from tackle to tight end last year, has now moved back to tackle. Runge will be handling the ball from the center position.

The biggest change in the lineup was a move that took 6'6", 265 pound offensive tackle Dan Brennan and put him on the defensive side of the field at left tackle. According to Pickett, this move was made for two reasons.

The first reason is the consistently improving play of sophomore offensive tackle Don Day. The 6'1", 255 pounder is "an excellent tackle," according to Pickett, and should be able to provide more than adequate relief for both Pasquale and Jackson.

The second reason is that Ken Johnson, a 6'3", 240 pound projected starter at defensive tackle, had a knee operation over the summer and will not be ready for the start of the season. Hopefully, Brennan's size and strength will fill the gap left by Johnson's injury.

Which brings us to the defense, a crew that was depleted by graduation but which Pickett believes is in no way a liability.

"We have lost a lot of people on defense," said Pickett, "But we have a legitimate starter in Rose (6', 236 pound middle guard Scott Rose) and a very solid player in Comeau (returning starter Todd Cameau, a 6'2", 200 pound defensive end)."

Brennan will take the left tackle position, leaving the right hand slot open for a sophomore, 6'4", 240 pound Dave Cavanaugh, whom Pickett referred to as an "outstanding sophomore." Senior defensive end Joe Graham, at 6'3" and 205 pounds, looks to be the forerunner for the other end slot.

The linebacker spots look to be a toss-up at this point between junior linebacker Dave Littlefield, sophomore Kevin Brown and seniors Steve Foreman and John Debs.

The heart of this year's defensive unit will lie in the defensive secondary.

"One of the main reasons I feel strongly about our defense this year is the defensive backfield," said Pickett.

Pickett was referring to the return of the senior tri-captain Dwayne Lopes and senior All-American Grady Fuller. Lopes, who is a two year first team All-Yankee Conference pick, was an honorable mention AP All-American last year when he led the team in interceptions with six from his cornerback position.

Fuller was an unanimous choice as a first team All-Yankee Conference player along with being selected for the third team AP All-American squad, the second team UPI All-New England team and the third team AP All-New England group. Fuller is the leading tackler of the returnees to the team and fills the strong safety slot.

The kicking duties will be delegated to Bob Ross, who will handle the place kicking and Demo Drougas, a fullback who will double as the punter.

Pickett feels that the team, as a whole, arrived for preseason drills in excellent physical condition and that the outlook is good.

"I just hope we can live up to being a typical UMass football team and hope we can play well enough that our schedule doesn't end on November 20, although we're certainly not looking past September 11.

The season opener will be this Saturday at 1:30 p.m. at Alumni Stadium versus West Chester State.

An unknown sportswriter speaks out

By AN UNKNOWN SPORTSWRITER

Editors NOTE: As a rule, we do not print any copy which is not printed by either one of our staff writers or correspondents. However, this story was slipped under the door of the Collegian office during one of the nights the back-to-school issue was being put together. It had no name and no one at the paper seems to wish to take credit for it.*

But, we needed to fill a little extra space and the story in itself reads fairly well so we decided to run it anyway.

If the person who dropped the article off would like to stop by the Collegian, we would like to see you and at least get your name so that you can get credit for having your article printed.

Ah, back at UMass at last. If I had to listen to my parents yell at me for staying out late one more time I think I'd have gone crazy. For breakfast, the usual back-to-school special: the last three tall Buds of the case you brought up in your suitcase (and you told your father that it was extra heavy because your albums were in there). He wouldn't appreciate the fact that you had to have beers when you got back to school and your first day was a Sunday. Lots of interesting developments in the world of sports lately...The Red Sox should still be in the thick of things when this gets printed. Everyone said all summer that they were expecting them to win the pennant and sure enough they fall behind and all of a sudden everyone jumps on the "Oh they choke every year" bandwagon. And why not? This is Massachusetts. What would the winter be like without every non-baseball fan being able to jump into a conversation about sports by remarking how the Red Sox always choke...By now Ricky Henderson has stolen his 118 and 119 bases and the furor has died down of the Oakland Athletics speedster's quest for Lou Brock's base stealing in a season mark. I brought this up because I was particularly interested in the uproar that came out of Oakland when Henderson attempted to tie the record at 118 against Detroit. In that game Henderson needed three stolen bases to reach 118. He got two of these in the first inning. Henderson then got on base in the eighth but had a runner, Fred Stanley, in front of him on second. It was then alleged that a double-steal call was made by manager Billy Martin. Stanley then got picked off and Henderson was thrown out later on a pitchout that caught him running. That wasn't the best part of the story though as Detroit manager Sparky Anderson said Martin had Stanley picked off on purpose. Martin, not exactly a candidate for the Mr. Congeniality Award among managers, says that that's a lie, but that Anderson had Stanley walked on purpose so that he'd be in Henderson's way. Who's telling the truth? American League president Lee McPhail, in his infinite wisdom, will review the umpire's report. Who writes the scripts for all these characters anyway?...Dave Cowens has been a major topic of conversation. I, of course want him to play forward for the Celtics with Larry Bird moved to off guard (although at first I wanted Cowens as the off guard). Some teams wouldn't even come to town to play a bruising team like that. Too many injuries might result. But "Big Red" will most likely go elsewhere (and probably has gone elsewhere by this time) and be forced into playing a style of ball that he's not suited for. No matter what he does he'll never be the same guy I idolized as a kid. He'll always be wearing green when I envision him diving across the checkerboard-like Garde Boston Garden floor for a ball that is just going out of bounds. In my mind he always gets it, somehow hurls it back into play (most often into Jo Jo White's hands) and then crashes into the press section so hard that you don't expect to see him up for a week. But, there he goes, back on defense after a "Hondo" (John Havlicek for heathens) jumper. Remember what a strong guy the matchups with Kareem Abdul Jabbar? He was intense. I realize this sounds like an eulogy, but Dave Cowens will never be the reason why I always wanted number 18 when youth league shirts were being passed out at the beginning of the season unless he's wearing a Celtic uniform. If only Big Red could stay green. Que sera sera (five semesters of Spanish to get out of Spanish requirement and the first time I've ever used Spanish and I learned it from the TV show with Doris Day)...One final thing — a prediction (also known as something to think about)...Should Renaldo Nehamish's move to take his track skills onto the football field prove fruitful, there will be a lot of track stars who will start considering using their specialty in pro-sports. Imagine a high jumper who could clear seven-feet dunking basketballs?...Must run off now. I want to figure out where all the buildings my classes are held in are located before the first day of classes, don't want to look like a freshman.

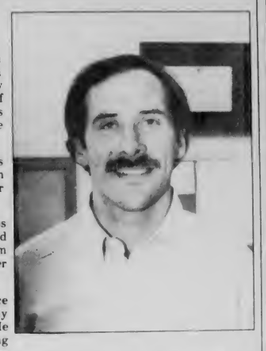
Gettler named new UMass soccer coach

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff



Jeff Gettler is a very likable guy. You almost get the feeling that he should be a public relations person instead of the new head soccer coach for the University of Massachusetts. He even smiles and says hello to you in the hallway before he realizes you're there for an interview.

But, he is the new coach and, as such, his job is to turn last year's 5-10-1 Minuteman performance around and put UMass soccer back on top in New England.

"I feel that potentially they (the UMass booters) can be a real good team," said Gettler. "It's just a matter of getting them all to play together and do some good soccer things both tactically and technically."

Gettler, 31, has had plenty of experience as both a player and a coach to apply towards teaching good team soccer. He comes here with six years of head coaching experience, the past four years at Bates College and the two prior to that at the University of Lowell.

Before becoming a head coach, Gettler served as an assistant coach at Boston College. And he is also quick to point out that he has attended camps in Brazil, England and Holland in an effort to master his coaching skills.

As a collegiate athlete at Lycoming College in Pennsylvania, Gettler was a captain for two years as well as an All-Conference player in both 1972 and 1973. He was also a member of a collegiate all-star team that toured Europe in 1972.

Gettler hasn't had an opportunity to meet many of his players yet since his selection as head coach came after the school year came to a close.

"The few players I do know are very good players," he said in reference to Mike Gibbons, a senior, juniors Kevin Flynn and Lenny Margolis and sophomore Nick Marciano.

Gettler has one more week to get acquainted with his troops before they open the season and a three game host stand against Bridgeport in Boyden Field.

"One of my key objectives," he continues, "is to make UMass soccer something people like to watch. The players I know are attackers, exciting players. So I think we have the potential for a very exciting team."

"The more support we have, the better things are going to be," said Gettler, "and we're not afraid to earn that support if the fans will just give us a chance."

All-American Holmstrom heads women's soccer

By NANCY GONTER
Collegian Staff

The 1982 version of the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team is looking forward to a season that is as successful as the 1981 version which placed seventh in the nation.

One time All-American soccer player Maddie Mangini and Margie Anderson, one of last year's leading goal scorers, were the only two players that the Minutewomen lost to graduation.

The Minutewomen have a host of returning players and a promising group of freshmen.

Leading the returning players is senior Nina Holmstrom. Holstrom was named to the All-American first team last year and, according to head coach Kalekeni Banda, is one of the top mid-fielders in the country.

Also returning will be Stacy Flionis, whom Banda says is considered to be one of the most skillful women's soccer players in the nation.

Banda is counting on all four of his team captains for high quality play. Holmstrom, teamed with Natalie Prosser, Jackie Gaw and Deborah Pickett will be the captains.

Gaw will be leading the defense with the help of Pickett, who is returning after missing last season due to a knee injury, and juniors Mary Szetela and Deanna Denault.

With over 40 freshman trying out for the team, Banda will have his choice of many skilled players.

Debbie Harackiewicz, a freshman from Ludlow, is one of the new recruits. Harackiewicz has been named to the All-Western Massachusetts team four years in a row and is a member of the junior select team.

Banda hopes that Harackiewicz will continue the UMass women's soccer team tradition of having a freshman as a leading scorer.

Freshman Kelly Hutcheons from West Springfield , who was also named to the Western Mass. team four years in a row, is another top recruit.

The team will also have two new additions to the coaching staff.

The first assistant will be Jim Williams. Williams is a former Olympic coach and has coached and taught skiing, tennis, football, track and wrestling. He was also the assistant coach for the United States ski team.

Williams will work with the team as the physical fitness and training specialist, and in the Spring he will be the women's indoor soccer coach.

The second assistant will be Simon Ostrov. Ostrov was born in Russia and played on the Moscow Junior soccer team for seven years. Ostrov also played for the Moscow Junior Select team and was their leading scorer.

After coming to the United States, he attended high school in West Hartford where he was named to the All-Conference soccer team in his junior year and all-State team in his senior year.

He is currently a student in the Sports Management program at UMass.

"With these additions, I'm very optimistic," Banda said. "In the next four years UMass will maintain a top standard in national rankings," he said.

The women began pre-season practice and try-outs on August 29.

Stickers still strong without Strong

Hixon's offense in transition

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

The question for the University of Massachusetts field hockey team is simple: where will the strength come from now that there is no Strong in the lineup?

The Strong is, of course, Judy Strong, last year's co-captain and the leading scorer for the UMass stickers during all four years of her collegiate career. The graduation of Strong, a member of the 1980 U.S. Olympic field hockey team, and her fellow co-captain Sue Caples has put a hole in the Minutewomen's hot air balloon that flew all the way to a national championship title game (which they lost to the University of Connecticut 4-1). A hole that can be mended though, according to fifth year coach Pam Hixon.

"We'll have to change our style of play," said Hixon. "We're going to have to spread our offense out with more passing and less one-on one."

But, despite knowing that the offense will be undergoing a change, Hixon knows that she still has lost only two players from what was the number-one ranked team in the nation for the better part of last year. Still, she remains conservative.

"We have a lot of players returning, but it's hard to be overly optimistic because we've got such a tough act to follow," said Hixon.

A tough act, indeed, last year's squad had an undefeated 17-0-2 record before the heartbreaking loss to UConn.

The defense will be the same stingy group of hustling Minutewomen that allowed goalkeeper Patty Shea to collect 14 shutouts, the second year in a row she did so.

"I think our strength has to be in the defense where we didn't lose anybody," Hixon said. "And, naturally, if we don't allow the other team to score it makes the job easier for our offense."

The offense, Hixon says, is not necessarily a weak point for the Minutewomen.

"I wouldn't call it a weakness, but it will take us a few weeks to see who's going to emerge as an offensive punch," said Hixon. "That means everyone has a chance to get into the action."

The action will be at UMass before the stickers have too much time to prepare. Two scrimmages (Sept. 7 with Keene State and Sept. 10 with the University of North Carolina, both at NOPE at 3 p.m.) are all that separate them from a season opener with Northwestern University, another of last year's top ten teams in the nation. Hixon said that this game will "definitely show us where we stand."

"We definitely will not be complete then, but we'll be ready to play. It will give us a chance right away to see how our players are going to hold up under that type of competition."

Competition is something the Minutewomen will have plenty of this year. They play a full 19-game schedule that contains all Division One teams except for Westfield State, who happens to have a very good team, according to Hixon. And on top of that, every team they play will know that the UMass team they're playing against was ranked number one in the nation last year.

Will this year's team be able to overcome the loss of its top point producer and be able to gain playoff berth once again?

"It's hard to say," said Hixon. "We just want to play one game at a time."

"Our primary concern is improvement. We're building a new system and so we expect to improve from game to game. At the end of the season we want to be playing the best hockey we can be playing."

"We had a very good recruiting year and two freshmen in particular, Megan Donnelly and Chris Kocot, will definitely help us out," Hixon said.

On top of the freshmen, Hixon also has added strength in the return of Judy Morgan, who was considered to be last

UMass athletes try their luck in the pros

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

Welcome back. It has been a little over three months since these pages have been active and able to keep UMass sports fans up to date with the Minuteman sports scene both on and off the respective fields of play. With this in mind, here is a brief compilation of some of the events that have transpired during that period.

Three members of last year's University of Massachusetts' football team signed free agent pro contracts during the spring. All-New England offensive tackle Chris O'Neil signed with the Kansas City Chiefs, All-Yankee Conference defensive end George Lewis signed with the Washington Redskins, and All-Yankee Conference cornerback Max Jones signed with the Dallas Cowboys as a linebacker. Unfortunately, none of the three secured a final spot on their respective club.

Martha and Julie Ready who are reportedly playing pro ball in a women's league in Italy.

As previously announced in the spring, the Eastern Eight, the league the men's basketball team plays in, became the Atlantic Ten Conference after the addition of Temple and and Saint Joseph's Universities. The president of the new conference will be UMass athletic director Frank McInerney. In addition, the conference has adopted the three-point play and a 40-second clock that will be turned off on the final four minutes of play and in all overtime periods.

Speaking of men's basketball, two Minutemen, 6'9" freshman Tom Emerson and 6' 8" Skip Connors, helped to provide some height to a guard-loaded Boston Celtics rookie camp during the last couple of weeks of August. The camp, which is set up so Celtic rookies and free agents can be seen and evaluated, was held in Marshfield, Massachusetts. Emerson and Connors did battle with the Celts number one draft pick Darren Tillis and Ed Spriggs, formerly of Georgetown University.

The women's tennis team, under coach John Beal, qualified for the AIAW nationals via a second place finish in the Easterns and managed to finish eighteenth in the nation.

Most valuable player honors were bestowed on the senior baseballer Warren McReddie for his final year as a Minuteman. He batted .394 and was named first team All-New England and first team Northeast Region enroute to being dratfed in the 19th round by the Texas Rangers.

All New-England and all Northeast honors were also garnered by softball team members Gina Mantino, Jackie Gaw, Fran Troy, Tina Coffin, and Chris Coughlin. Gaw competed in the National Sports Festivsl in softball.

John Wright, a junior, and Greg Mader, a senior , were elected co-captains of the 1983 UMass track team . Wright was the New England runner-up in the high hurdles, an event in which he won the Eastern championship. Mader is the school record holder in the decathlon and placed second in that event in the Easterns.

Lacrosse players Jim Weller and Ray Cozzi were named to the New England Lacrosse Association's first team and Mike Lavin was a second team selection. Weller spent his summer playing for Canada on the Canadian National Team.

And what did you do this summer?

"She (Morgan) will definitely help us out," Hixon said."She can play at a lot of positions and right now she is a utility player. She'll play wherever it makes a combination fit."

Donnelly, by the way, participated in this year's National Sports Festival along with four of her new teammates, Carol Progulske, Ro Tudryn, Pam Moryl and Patty Smith.

Those amazing UMass ID cards

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

Doubtless, Saturday's football home opener will roll around and a group of freshmen, having unpacked and successfully found most of their classes, will decide to go see the game.

"You guys can go," one frosh will say though, "I'm a little low on cash already. Let me know how they do."

Poor guy, he's going to miss the game just because of a lack of money.

Good news, young sports fan, entrance to football games at UMass is free! All you need to so is show your student identification card, complete with a fall validation sticker of course, to a gate attendant and you are welcome to roam the confines of Alumni Stadium and cheer the Minutemen on to victory.

In fact, a student ID with a validation sticker is all that is needed to get into any regular season contest for any UMass athletic event.

YES, YOU TOO CAN SEE GARRY PEARSON RUN — And it's free!

IF YOU DON'T HAVE AN I.D., YOU CAN CUT THIS ONE OUT.

Yes, that same card that took you into the dining commons for lunch this afternoon (don't hold the card responsible for the quality of the food) can take you to the game this weekend and still retain the power to admit you to the Curry Hicks Cage this winter to see the basketball team play.

And all the wonderment doesn't stop there.

This amazing piece of plastic holds the key to physical fitness, too.

A student ID will allow you to develop more muscles on one of the Universal weight machines (NOPE or Boyden gyms) or by pumping the free weights downstairs at Boyden.

If weightlifting doesn't suit you, you have a choice of activities ranging from racquetball to basketball, and from swimming to badminton. And all you need to have with you is your student ID. Isn't that wonderful?

Need clothes to wear when you work out? No problem.

Just take your ID (no, it's not a charge card too) over to Boyden and head for the co-ed equipment area. Show your card to one of the attendants in the cage and he or she will issue you a shirt, a towel, a pair of socks, a jock strap (optional by sex), and a basket with a lock to keep them in. All this and no extra charge!

And you don't even have to clean your clothes. Just give them to the people in the cage when you're done and they'll give you clean clothes, free.

Free, just for taking your student ID card around with you. Why don't they have these cards available at home?

Well, the truth of the matter is that the card proves you have you paid your athletic fee and that you are entitled to all of this "free" stuff.

But why think of it that way. Think of it as free.

Free. Don't you just love your student identification card, even though the picture didn't come out too well (at least not mine).

See you at the game, freshmen.

FLIPPED OVER UMASS — Mark Stevenson flies high over spectators during Sportsfest, a series of competitions held on the UMass campus during August. The events were a precursor to a major event called the Bay State Games. Doug Arnot, executive director of the Games, said the UMass campus is being considered a possible site for the Games. The Bay State Games would bring 3000 athletes to Amherst during the summer to compete in events such as bicycling, basketball, soccer, gymnastics, and weightlifting.

BECOME A 4-LETTER MAN.

Why are a lot of college men and women becoming buddies in Army ROTC?

Probably because Army ROTC is full of the kind of people other people go out of their way to meet.

ROTC students tend to be high achievers who are interested in more than their studies. They're popular students with a serious side, but who like to have a good time, too.

In other words, when people join Army ROTC they often meet people a lot like themselves.

Concerts at the Club Casino

By DEAN RANZO

Ever since the big band sound of the Casino Ballroom was bought out, along with the club, the Club Casino, which replaced it, has matured into a first-rate, diversified club providing some of the best entertainment north of Boston.

Located in Hampton Beach, New Hampshire, the club offers a handsome, classy interior with wall-to-wall carpeting and candle-lit tables.

Yet it has a comfortably casual atmosphere. The acoustics in the Club Casino are fine, and the entertainment nothing but professional. The entertainment ranges from rock and roll to oldies revivals. Many performers have a bonding relationship with the club.

Harry Chapin played every summmer and was close to owner James Goodwin. His brother, Tom, came this summer. Arlo Guthrie performed on his 35th birthday and played "Alice's Restaurant," for the first time in years, as a special tribute to Goodwin and the club. Roy Orbison, Southside Johnny and The Ramones return every summer.

The club seats 1600, but the dance floor holds about 250...even then you're dancing in a space the size of your feet. To make matters worse, this area isn't even in front of the stage. The experience of watching the band and dancing is lost.

Here are highlights of the 1982 summer season:

SPYROGYRA

Spyrogyra is a six man jazz fusion band. Their specialty is modern techno-jazz blended with rhythm and blues, along with light ventures into funk and Latin.

At the Casino concert, the bulk of their music was defined by fast-paced melodic jams melting into excruciating saxophone, keyboards and guitar work. Changes were so smooth they were unnoticeable.

Spyrogyra is conventional, as evidenced by their reliance on the horns for the backbone of their intensity. The saxophone played vigorously, trying to keep from being overshadowed by the electricity of the keyboards and guitar. This was complemented by a crisp sound missing from most rock concerts.

Spyrogyra has no vocalist, but the group's percussionist provided a break in the monotony that sometimes comes from watching musicians jam. He was very active, using all his limbs on a variety of instruments and romping around in a graceful, modern dance style that could have passed for an audition for a Broadway musical.

The one major flaw in the show was the lack of diversification. Towards the end, the music all sounded the same. It fell into a groove that became cocktail music in the background of conversation and a reason to leave for others. The monotony was broken by the first encore when keyboardest Tom Schuman played a keytar (a synthesized guitar-shaped keyboard). This produced outrageous chords and a chance for Schuman to let loose onstage. Schuman said he used the keytar as a climactic effect, but I felt the climax should have come earlier in the show.

The music, for the most part, was fast and hard, almost to the point of being rock and roll. But the experience of the band, which is releasing its sixth album shortly, kept it from straying from the main objective of delivering easy listening, clean, electronic jazz.

JONATHAN EDWARDS

Edwards' Casino concert was fast-paced and fun, as he breezed along with heads-up confidence, never allowing the crowd to catch up to him. Edwards visibly had a great time onstage, jamming melody after melody with his electric acoustic guitar and harmonica and accompanied by pianist Kenney White, who should not be mentioned lightly. I honestly believe White to be the slickest piano player since Elton John. Everyone's eyes focused on the pianist's hands whenever he let loose, which, fortunately, was quite often. His hands rolled over one another, between one another and seemingly through one another while delivering either wild ragtime of uncontrolled blues. White's caliber of play effectively kept up the accelerated pace of the show.

Edwards' voice was sooo sweet and controlled during a nonamplified lovesong; the crowd was mesmerized. Edwards did this song with intimate gestures that only a performer really getting into the emotion of his song would dare express.

Edwards expressed his emotions bodily through the show. By the time he ended the performance, with "Sunshine, Go Away" and an elaborate production of "Shanty," plenty of people were also showing their now unrestrained emotions.

JOHN KAY & STEPPENWOLF

Remember Steppenwolf? Of course you do, they sang "Born to be Wild" and "Magic Carpet Ride," right? I'll bet they're the only songs you can think of by them, aren't they? Well don't feel bad because even after seeing them you would only remember to songs: "Born to be Wild" and "Magic Carpet Ride."

The sell-out crowd on hand at the Club Casino was basically unmoved by the group's new songs "Down to Earth," a down to earth rocker that never does get off the ground and "Every Man For Himself," another clean-cut rock jam that resembles "Bad Company." These new songs from the group's upcoming album "Wolf Tracks" are no worse than current rock by the likes of Loverboy or REO Speedwagon. A little more was expected, however, from the immortal John Kay, the only original member from the band of the late 60s.

On occasion the group did put out that gut-gripping, deep sound, backed by heavy bass lines which represented the drug-oriented rock of the 60s. These tunes pleased most of the crowd, which was made up largely of Steppenwolf era rockers (probably just being released from drug rehabilitation centers).

Kay was absent for one instrumental which was an excellent fusion of funk and jazz. It was the closest sign of Steppenwolf attempting to change with the times that was successful. One other attempt was a laughable electronic solo by the keyboardest whose name I fortunately did not get. This guy lacked talent, imagination and any sense of direction while elaborating on what turned out to be the eerie introduction to "Magic Carpet Ride."

From the first chord of "Born to be Wild" until minutes after it ended, not one person in the Club Casino could stay still. The crowd went totally wild and I was numbed by the forceful intensity of this adrenalin-pumping, timeless classic. Seeing Steppenwolf do this song was in itself worth the price of admission. John Kay wisely ended with this song, leaving the crowd mercilessly teased. Appetites were satisfied as John Kay and Steppenwolf came back to do their lesser known, slow funk classic, "The Pusher."

HUEY LEWIS & THE NEWS

Right away you knew Huey Lewis and The News were confused onstage. The bass player and drummer wore 50s, rehabs with greased black hair and Joe Cool expressions, the guitarist and sax player were dressed like punks and the keyboardest was conventional with Levis and a polo shirt. As for Huey Lewis himself, the towering, well-built, somewhat awkward mover dressed in all-black, succeeded at becoming a sexual fantasy for the young ladies in the crowd.

With all the differing appearances in the band, The News succeeded in producing a combination of the styles. In other words, Top 40 pop music. Every song sounded the same with repetitive rhythms, unnoticeable bass lines, laughable leads and an occasional sax bit thrown in to add flavor. The music would then pause for Huey to sing a few lines (that were sure to have the word "love," "baby" or "girlfriend" in it), snap his fingers and sway his hips. The crowd would cheer.

Huey Lewis lacks the authority, moves and smooth flow to get a crowd on their feet screaming for more. Just the opposite is Sal Baglio of The Stompers, who fortunately opened for Huey Lewis. Aside from Southside Johnny, nobody gets a club going so crazy, no matter how droll the crowd is, than the fast-paced, be-bopping Stompers.

THE MOTELS

Wow! That was the Motels? I don't believe it. Everybody screamed when Martha Davis and the Motels came onstage, but I thought that was typical for a band who has a hit album out. It is typical, but this band is not.

The show was a group effort. All six band members made you smile and enjoy their antics and enthusiasm. The show was full of differing emotions, communicated with sheer professionalism by Martha Davis. Davis was all over the stage. A few times on her knees, singing with a cry in her voice and an occasional tear in her eye. With tremendous vocal control and range, the energy of her emotion wasn't missed by anybody.

The mix of music was delicate and well organized. One song, Martha is hurting and lonely, the next she is on top of the world. This was put across with the rigid energy of the band, who mixed between rock, new wave and even swing. The musicians were forceful while they and Martha shared the limelight unselfishly. The next time I see the Motels, I'll be one of those people screaming for them to come on.

SOUTHSIDE JOHNNY

If you like Southside Johnny on vinyl, you'll love him live. But if you're like me and don't particularly care for him on vinyl, you'll love him anyway. There is no doubt in my mind that Southside Johnny and the Asbury Jukes is the best club act anywhere. If you think the Stompers can get a crowd going, picture seven more band members, including a high-spirited four-man horn section, putting out more organized, better written music with more flare; all the while combined with the drunken demeanor of the unshaven Southside projects energy and expertise.

Unlike so many rowdy groups, Southside and the Jukes work it slow and steady and eventually drive the crowd insane, instead of wearing them out after the first couple of songs. The Jukes did a version of "Breakdown" that made you forget who Tom Petty is and a rendition of their hit, "Talk to Me," with its now classic guitar introduction.

By the time of the fourth encore, everybody knew that the vintage club rocker, "We're Having a Party" was coming. But Southside wouldn't give it to them just yet. He appropriately teased the crowd, softly singing lines from famous osongs and pretending to whip into a rocker like he had done so sharply throughout the show. When he finally did break into the rocker, the crowd was hysterical.

FLOCK OF SEAGULLS

Anybody who like the hit single "I Ran" by this young group will love the rest of their music. "I Ran" is exemplary of the rest of their music, though a bit less haunting. A Flock of Seagulls had quite an impressive opening, contributed to by the loudly intensified, reeling synthesizer and lead singer, keyboardest, rhythm guitarist Mike Score. Score was dressed in a black shiny polyester jump suit with blonde hair styled like the Concorde jet with the wings up. He had an almost emotionless profile that resembled Gary Neuman. The music, too, resembled Neuman; although comparisons should also go to U-2 and Joy Division. I was expecting a guitar-oriented punk band, but there was a heavy concentration on the synthesizer, especially earlier in the show, before Score turned rhythm guitarist. "Someone at the Door" was very dramatic as dramatic drums and omnipresent bass lead the way with a perfect dance beat, intruded by the U-2ish, echoing guitar and melodic synthesizer for a highstrung musical introduction that melted into the boyish vocals of Score.

Elvis Costello and The Talking Heads both recent rocked the New England area with sell-out concerts. Look for reviews of these shows and others in this week's Collegian.

TRAILERS . . . . . By ANDY GORDON

Director Amy Heckerling works out a scene with Jud Reinhold for a scene in the just released Fast Times at Ridgemont High.

By ANDREW GORDON

[Editor's Note: The following is the first installment of a column which will appear in every Friday's Collegian. It will contain random notes and observations about the motion picture industry.]

Shooting has resumed on The Twilight Zone movie after the untimely decapitation of actor Vic Morrow. Footage of Morrow, shot for the John Landis segment of the film, will be kept in the film's final cut, although the two Korean children who were also killed have been edited out. The film's other three segments are to be directed by Joe (The Howling) Dante, George (Mad Max, The Road Warrior) Miller and Steven Spielberg....Porky's has grossed just under $100,000,000 thus far. Porky's: The Next Day is currently before the cameras for release next summer. Psyched or what?....Jaws 3 is to begin filming at Sea World in Florida in October. The film has not been cast yet and the script isn't even finished, but one thing is known: the film will be shot in 3-D....The Pennsylvania Film Bureau is offering producers a unique location lure: a 500-foot steel and concrete bridge available for "total, graphic destruction." The bridge, which spans the Youghiogheny River, is slated for demolition anyway.... MGM UA's two major summer releases, Poltergeist and Rocky III have set company records in the Far East. In Japan, Rocky III took in $1,300,000 in its first three days. Similar records were set in Hong Kong and South Africa....Fast Times at

Gang of Four at Metro

Gang of Four
July 13
Metro, Boston

By DOUGLAS MUISE

Boston's dance club — Metro — represents a synthesis of musical periods and styles.

Formerly a disco (Boston-Boston), one can still pick-out many of the fixtures of that woeful epoch in Metro's present decor: the ultrachic neon lights, the sweeping stream-lined bars, the all-encompassing dance-floor; and of course, the incessant dance-beat (only now there's more Go-Go's and less Bee-Gee's to be heard). But then there is Metro's other side — its first rate live music. Although Metro's specialty is recorded music, when they do book a band it remarkably ends up becoming something of a new music event. These guys just don't fool around.

Metro startled everyone this July by showcasing the eclectic emissions of Gang of Four. Gang of Four is a very intellectual quartet. Choppy neo-funk rhythms mesh neatly with anti-authoritarian lyrics to create a post-punk minimalism seldom danceable, but highly listenable. Gang of Four prides itself on its "correct" political stance and highly disciplined musical method all of which is fairly engaging on vinyl. But the big question here is..." do lyrical leftism and musical minimalism make for an exciting night in the big city?" Better: "Can Gang of Four make a nasty subject like politics fun?"

Rock has always been a political medium, but when those politics threaten to squelch rock's fundamental emotional core it becomes virtually alll work and no play. No one takes particular delight in being lectured to and this idea is central to the Gang of Four dilemma. They preach, you listen, and the ceremonial sweat never mingles. The band just sinks deeper and deeper into that cloud of detached obscurity. Gang of Four is just plain ignorant of rock's essential physicality. The idea is there but the conviction, the passion behind those words, is absent. I kept wishing they would drop the pretense and thrash out an impromptu version of "Sex Bomb." Or at least remove those natty blazers — anything to shatter the plodding complacency of their performance. They build-up the tension you expect from rock, but the imminent release...well, it just never follows. They just sort of leave you hanging there. At least with one of Gang of Four's less sophisticated predecessors, one could slam the anxiety away, but with Gang of Four you exit more angst-ridden than when you arrived. It all makes for a very tedious evening.

In retrospect, this summer's show was an improvement over last winter's at the Bradford Hotel and previous Channel shows over the years. There were some geniunely "cathartic" moments when the chemistry was just right like during "Damaged Goods," "I Love a Man in a Uniform," and "What We All Want." But for a better part of the 85 minute set, Gang of Four was entrenched in tedium. Fun doesn't seem to be a part of Gang of Four's political vocabulary. Oh, about the Bongos. They're a hardworking little band from Jersey with a sound and look reminiscent of New York's dBs. Cute but confused.

Summer Film : An Overview

By ANDREW GORDON

This was the movie summer. World-wide, box office records were broken. For the first time in years, critical and financial successes abounded, though the summer did have its share of turkeys. Here, now, is an overview:

E.T.

This was the summer movie and Steven Spielberg is fast becoming the summer director; his Jaws and Raiders of the Lost Ark were both summer hits and now E.T. is well on its way to becoming the highest grossing film of all time (it earned over three million dollars a day for its first month and a half).

What more can be said about the film that hasn't been said? It's a beautiful, touching film told from the point-of-view of a child. Drawing from everything from Peter Pan to George Melies to the "Boy and his Dog" genre, E.T. tells the story of the love between the stranded ET and Eliot (Henry Thomas) and his siblings Gertie and Michael (Drew Barrymore and Robert McNaughton). Vincent Canby made an interesting point that E.T. is a kind of reverse Wizard of Oz, with ET being the stranded Dorothy trying to get home and Eliot, Gertie and Michael in the Scarecrow, Lion and Tinman roles.

While some have argued that the film is overly sentimental and emotionally manipulative, these aspects cannot be viewed as negative. Steven Spielberg set out to make an escapist fantasy for the Eighties and has succeeded.

Conan wasn't reviewed here and he's pissed.

POLTERGEIST

Spielberg's other summer hit, however, is awful and overrated. Poltergeist is essentially a haunted house movie but it's not even as good as The Amityville Horror. Poorly scripted and structured, Poltergeist borrows from dozens of other films and throws them together into a mish-mash of a movie. The first act is interesting, and so is the conclusion, but they don't belong in the same movie; and the ridiculously convoluted middle doesn't belong in any movie.

Interesting characters are introduced (notably Craig T. Nelson and Jobeth Williams) and then they scream a lot. The movie is predominantly special effects. Granted, they're great special effects, but presented solely for the sake of special effects. Altered States syndrome. No wonder director Tobe Hooper didn't complain when producer Spielberg began receiving credit for the picture.

DINER

Easily the best "small" film of this or any recent summer. Screenwriter Barry Levinson (And Justice for All, High Anxiety) made the jump to director and created this wonderful film with a shoestring budget and a relatively unknown cast. Set in Philadelphia in the late fifties, the film follows a group of young men who spend late hours at a diner trying to figure out life and women and what they want. The themes of "male bonding" and the lack of communication between men and women are treated touchingly and with humor.

The ensemble acting is perfect; of particualr note are Steve Guttenberg as the jovial Modell, off-Broadway actor Kevin Bacon as Fenwick, Mickey O'Rourke (the arsonist in Body Heat) as the smooth-talking Boogie and Daniel Stern (Cyril in Breaking Away) as Shrevie, the married member of the group. I will hastily predict now that one of these four will win the Academy Award for best supporting actor next April.

ROOMMATES

The first attempt in a while to mainstream pornography succeeds - almost. Roommates is getting play in otherwise commercial family theaters and while it could not quite stand on its own as anything but pornography, it is better than the average porno. A conscious effort has been made to build the three main characters, although even the raincoat crowd. It is the lack of humanity, and credibility, of these (and I quote) "sex scenes" that prevents the film from fully making the jump to mainstream.

The one exception is a tender relationship Veronica Hart has with a young gay actor. For sheer tenderness and emotion, this part of the film has something one rarely finds in even a commercial venture.

FIREFOX

Right-wing fascistic nonsense drivel, which is fine if you're a right-wing fascist and-or have very low standards for entertainment.

Clint Eastwood's annual blockbuster would more aptly have been titled "Let's see what this baby can do," a Clint coolism which accounts for much of the film's dialogue. Eastwood stars as Mitchell Gant, a top notch military pilot assigned to sneak into the U.S.S.R. and steal a jet fighter called Firefox. Only problem is, everytime there's a loud noise or someone speaks above a whisper, Clint gets a Vietnam flashback. Will he make it? This is called building suspense. Well, it doesn't work. We couldn't care less if he makes it. Clint, in fact, is only a supporting player in this film. The real star is a big, shiny black airplane that goes "Whoosh" and can kill lots of people. But an airplane does not a film make. The movie's last hour is a drawnout plane chase that, among other things, duplicates the death-star sequence from Star Wars.

To be fair, Firefox contains more than the inanity described above. It has symbolism. As David Denby pointed out, Gant is America, "traumatized by Vietnam and having lost its will to battle communism." The film's ultimate message is that it's time to put away Vietnam and get psyched to fight the Russkies. Incidentally, General Haig introduced the film at a military preview in Washington.

MEGAFORCE

Kind of like Firefox, only worse.

NIGHT SHIFT

A very pleasant surprise. Who could have expected much from a film featuring Happy Days boys Ron Howard and Henry Winkler as director and star, respectively? True, the film resembles sitcom, but it is good hearted and genuinely funny. Winkler is not tremendously credible or interesting as a nebbish morgue attendant, but co-star Michael Keaton gives a wild and unpredictable tour de force as his crazy partner. The two become pimps for a bunch of sweet young prostitutes. Howard is the second director this summer to portray sleaze and prostitution like it's the cleanest, most natural profession around (in fact, he films a pre-credits murder in balletic slow motion, a similar contradiction). Good supporting performances include Shelley Long as a hooker hooked on Winkler and a cameo by character actor extraordinaire Joe Spinnell as a gun-toting Maitre D.

THE THING

Now here's a good scare flick. John Carpenter's remake of the Howard Hawks classic not only does justice to the original, but in some respects improves upon it. James Arness in a monster suit was never all that frightening, but Rob Bottin's special effects for the new Thing are wonderfully grotesque. It's other assets are Carpenter's suspenseful pacing and an excellent assemblage of character actors.

Based on the short story "Who Goes There" (upon which Invasion of the Body Snatchers was also based), the film lacks its political punch - the original was a comment on McCarthyism - but it is nevertheless a tight and enjoyable film.

STAR TREK II - THE WRATH OF KHAN

Having never been a Trekie, I'm sure I missed out on many of the intricacies of the plot and characters, but, regardless, The Wrath of Khan is thoroughly likable and entertaining in a low-key, campy sort of way. The characters are not particularly credible and the situations are convoluted, but it doesn't matter; the film works in spite of these things. Perhaps because of them.

Based not on the first move but an episode of the series called "Space Seed," the story is about a nut-job named Khan who Admiral Kirk (he got kicked upstairs) had sent into exile years before. Khan, wildly overacted by Ricardo Montalban, swears revenge. there are lots of space battles and neat special effects (Interestingly, for an action picture, this picture has little actual action; not one fist-fight or even a person running). And in the end, there's a happy ending for all, except Spock.

THE BEST LITTLE WHOREHOUSE IN TEXAS

Director Colin Higgins took this brilliant Broadway show, an anti-repression, anti-puritanical comedy and turned it into a repressive, puritanical anti-comedy. He has not only fuzzed the social comment (obviously kissing up to the kind of group the show mocked), but has performed aesthetic sacrilige as well. Playwright Larry King's more interesting characters were dismissed (as was King himself, who wrote the first-draft screenplay), all but a few of Carol Connor's songs were thrown out, including the beautiful "Doatsey Mae," to make way for some sappy Dolly Parton croonings and Tommy Tune's near perfect choreography was replaced by move-for-move rip-offs from Seven Brides for Seven Brothers.

Not wanting to be outdone, Burt Reynolds proves he's as bad an actor as Higgins is a director. And everyone else, with the sole exception of Charles Durning, is miscast.

ROCKY III

Structurally, Rocky II was a remake of Rocky I. Rocky III is not, although the film works similarly and taps into the same emotions. The training scenes still get you psyched, the tear-jerky scenes put a lump in your throat, and the film climaxes with the same big fight scene. there's really nothing we haven't seen before, but it works. It's fun, it's entertaining, and while it has its long stretches, so do most recent movies.

Carl Weather's Apollo Creed gets to be a good guy and the bad guy role is filled by Clubber Lang. Played by Mr. T, Clubber is the best cinema villain in any film in years. Sure, we love hero Sylvester Stallone, but Clubber is so evil we love him, too. His scenes are charged with angry energy and "hunger." Too bad he's not the good guy. for a film saga so obsessed with the underdog, it's surprising that Clubber is not treated with more sympathy.

LA VIE CONTINUE

An Unmarried Woman in French and not nearly as good.

HANKY PANKY

I must admit to a certain bias I had reviewing this movie. Last summer I worked as an extra in the film but every scene I was in was savagely edited out of the final cut, Mad Fools! In any case, biases aside, this comedy is seriously awful.

Gilda Radner and Gene Wilder never achieve the comedic screen chemistry of, say, Hepburn and Tracy or Burns and Allen or more recently, Diane Keaton and Woody Allen or Goldie Hawn and Chevy Chase. In fact, Radner and Wilder achieve no screen chemistry whatsoever. Wilder has some funny bits early in the film but his hysterical shtick wears thin by the end. Radner has been given barely any role at all.

Were there some decent plot to take the burden off their shoulders, the film might have worked; but the storyline is absurdly convoluted mock-Hitchcock and if you can follow it, you're a better man than I, Gunga Din. Directed by Sidney Poitier, who should know better.

THE WORLD ACCORDING TO GARP

The film adaptation of John Irving's bestseller has had trouble finding an appreciative audience. Readers of the book tend to feel above the screen version and those who haven't read it are at a loss for understanding. That the film is being advertised as a comedy doesn't help. While it doesn't have the fullness of the novel, it does make a nice companion piece and can even stand on its own as a study in character. The film span the entire life of fictional fiction writer T.S. Garp and Robin Williams is excellent as the title character. So, too, are Glenn Close as his mother, Mary Beth Hurt as his wife and John Lithgow as the transsexual Roberta Muldoon. Steve Tesich's screenplay comes as close to creating the world of Garp as possible and George Roy Hill adds to this with fast pacing and credible direction. Not bad at all.

THE ROCKY HORROR PICTURE SHOW

Now in its sixth summer, this cult hit is still going strong, although the audience for this participatory film has changed drastically. What was once a weekly ritual for a genuinely punky crowd has turned into a novelty act for suburban high school preppies; a chance to play dress-up. This in itself is not bad, however the new audience has clearly missed the point of the movie. The Rocky Horror Show, first as a legitimate show and now as a movie, is a strike against sexual repression and constrictive self-conscious mores. It is brilliant; but this new audience does not fully realize why Frank N. Furter (Tim Curry) is the hero. When Janet (Susan Sarandon) realizes the company she's in, she says, "If only we were among friends" to which the audience yells "But you're not." Two years ago the reply was "But you are."

AUTHOR, AUTHOR

Al Pacino plays an author in this amiable piece of fluff and while one has to wonder why anyone would go through the trouble of making it, it is distractingly entertaining. Pacino is never bad, but his character here is not interesting or credible enough to be worthy of his participation. Tuesday Weld plays his flaky, unfaithful wife who leaves him with a houseload of their respective children; the most amusing of which is Eric Guffy in the kind of role Barry Gordon used to play. Alan King is outstanding as a theatrical producer but Richard Belzer, Bob and Ray and Andre Gregory are wasted in their roles. If you've seen the coming attractions, you've seen it all.

SUMMER LOVERS

Writer/director Randal Kleiser, the man who gave us The Blue Lagoon (Who asked for it?), must have enjoyed directing naked young people scampering around an island so much he decided to try it again. Again, he succeeds in duplicating the look and mood of a Playboy layout, but has somewhat altered his style. He combines the cinematography of documentary (lots of hand held camera following people around corners and extras sneaking peeks at the camera) with the pacing of a Fresca commercial. Kleiser's writing has improved just a bit. While the long stretches of tedium in The Blue Lagoon bordered on torture, there is something strangely appealing about the inanity of Summer Lovers' philosophy and observations ("People are like gas," one character states, "they expand to fill the space.").

As the film opens, hunky Michael (Peter Gallagher) and his stunning girlfriend Cathy (Daryl Hannah) arrive at a beautiful, exotic Greek Island where everyone is either twenty-two or ninety. Of the former category, no one works, or wears clothes, and the only activities are swimming and sex, dancing and sex or just sex. Kleiser's no slouch at creating fantasy situations. Anyhow, Lina (Valerie Quenessan) enters the picture and Michael falls for her. Conflict? Heck no, the three just become lovers. They sleep together, spew forth inanities about life and sleep together some more.

But here's the kicker, I liked it. Call it a guilty pleasure but this film really grows on you. The acting is run-of-the-mill, particularly that by Gallagher, whose two emotions are expressed by either brooding or grinning, but Daryl Hannah is fantastic. Sweet and clumsy and beautiful, she makes the movie. The soundtrack is excellent, too, with music by Chicago, Tina Turner, and The Pointer Sisters.

A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S SEX COMEDY

Woody Allen's new film is not as all-out raucous as his earlier work nor as cynical and serious as his more recent films but reaches a happy medium between the two. Light and low-key, it drifts from start to finish. Two couples (Jose Ferrer and Mia Farrow and Tony Roberts and Julie Hagerty) spend a weekend at the country house of Andrew and his wife (Allen and Mary Steenburgen and then switch partners. Andrew, an inventor, is typical neurotic Allen, and it's good to see him smile and make jokes again. What's interesting is that Allen has directed his women like they were all Diane Keaton. This is a film with three Annie Halls. But it is pleasant and funny.

Why is this man smiling? Daryl Hannah, Peter Gallagher and Valerie Quennessen in Summer Lovers.

George Roy Hill directs Robin Williams in a scene from The World According to Garp. Author John Irving (l.) appears in a cameo as a referee.

Jean-Pierre Cassel consoles Annie Girardot, who finds herself suddenly along after twenty years of marriage in La Vie Continue.

Shelley Long plays a hooker hooked on morgue attendant Henry Winkler in Night Shift.

At right: Mr. Hand is stunned when Spicoli orders a pizza delivered to class in the film Fast Times at Ridgemont High.

EDIE
By Jean Stein
Edited by George Plimpton
Knopf, 428 pp., $16.95

By DOUGLAS MUISE

It's not terribly difficult to understand what Andy Warhol, the burgeoning Pop culture, or all of Middle America, even, saw in the late Edie Sedgewick.

With those great dark eyes, carefully pruned blonde locks, eloquent legs, and eccentric costumes, Edie was like nothing anyone had ever seen before. And with the easing of social norms and general tie loosening of the late 1960's, Edie represented the ideal figurehead for a new youth-oriented culture. Young, boney, Girl of the Year in 1965, quintessential Warhol Superstar, jet-setting member of the fashion and literary circles, Edie was a youong woman impeccaably in tune with the times.

She represented many things to many people. To Warhol and the Factory crowd: a disarmingly pretty and pliable bright light to exploit in their newest "creative" venture. To the millions of Vogue and Life magazine readers: a fresh new trendsetter to idolize and emulate. All of Edie's overblown, drug-inundated, razor's-edge lifestyle and more is chronicled in Edie — the latest project from the dynamic duo of Jean Stein and George Plimpton.

The sub-title An American Biography is amazingly apt. It confirms my suspicions that Edie's general vogue — that portion of her existence saucy and exciting enough to interest the readers of a biography — was scrunched into a relatively short space of time. Edie, it seems, was one of the Beautiful People for only a few short years and as her days at the Factory drew to a close, her life lost much of its glamour and effervescence. If Stein and Plimpton were to cover just Edie's life, they would come up with precious little "good copy" (remember, Edie died at 28), only 200 pages or so and then they would be cutting it close. But the book is 428 pages long, you say. What's the rest filler? More or less, yes.

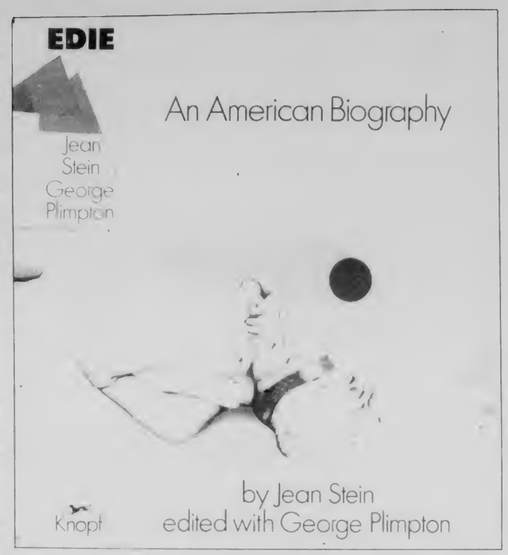
What Stein and Plimpton, in their infinite wisdom, have decided is to immortalize an entire generation. The Sedgewick generation, that is, in turn allowing them the gravity to play amateur psychologist and allowing us to discover for ourselves that Edie's behavior was the result of some quirk in her family's past. The authors dig all the way back to the end of the Revolutionary War to shake the dirt off the very roots of the Sedgewick family tree. It's not until page 63 that the name Edith even comes up.

The book's method is the interview. What we have here are no less than 428 pages of speculation, opinion, and lots of unqualified generalizations on the life and times of Edie Sedgewick. Its condensed from ten years of research and interviews with everyone even remotely connected with the name Sedgewick.

There are quite a few notables in this hodgepodge of interviewees, like Truman Capote: "Andy Warhol would like to have been Edie Sedgewick. He would like to have been a charming, well-bred debutante from Boston. He would have liked to be anything except Andy Warhol;" lots of wierdos like Viva: "Andy was at a party. I screwed up my courage and asked him if I could make a movie. Andy said 'If you want to take off your blouse, you can make a movie tomorrow.' I was afraid if I didn't take off my blouse that very next day he would forget me completely. So I put those round Band-Aids on my nipples and took off my blouse. They loved me; they thought it was an incredible acting technique they were seeing;" and several people who have no relevance to the book at all like Edie's Nanny, Jane Wilson: "I started to toilet train Edie right away. She did everything in her diapers, and I wouldn't have that. She had to sit until she did it.

Surprisingly, there is absolutely no intervention anywhere in the book by Stein or Plimpton whatsoever. None. What results is pure Pop orgasm, a veritable gossip-lovers dream. We are exposed to anything and everything in Edie's whirlwind of a life — from her food fetishes (shrimp and chocolate milkshakes) to the names of her Limo Chauffeurs. Objectivity is, of course, completely thrown out the window.

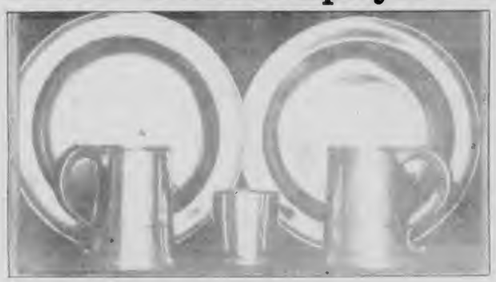
Despite differing perspectives on Edie's life, there is one emotion all of the interviewees share — sympathy. Edie is always envisioned as the epitome of beauty and charm. This never fluctuates. Even during the final few months of her life where she must have had something close to pure LSD coursing through her veins, she is still remembered as being totally together and ravishing as hell. Words like "fabulous," "special," "charming," and Warhol's favorite: "bee-you-ti-ful" crop up with nauseating regularity.



Edie is the ultimate fan letter; its a 400 page sob story. Edie intimates blubber on about how wonderful Edie was but we hear nothing about the low points in her life. She's dead so why focus on the deficiences in her character, right? It's at times like these that we need a referee or two to step in and keep the story straight — but Stein and Plimpton refuse. They chose to merely remain on the sidelines, greedily jotting down everything said.

Ultimately I find Edie a likeable piece of nostalgia but I can't help wondering if I'm getting the whole story.

Pewter exhibit displayed in Historic Deerfield museum



A new exhibit of pewter in the Historic Deerfield collection has recently been installed at the Deerfield, Massachusetts museum complex. Curator Peter Spang and Assistant Curator Peter Zea have placed a representative collection of American pewter in a group of antique cupboards in the parlor of the silver shop in order to show the similarity of processes and forms in the production of silver, pewter and other metals.

Silver has long been recognized as the queen of metals. Second only to gold in quality, malleability, beauty and scarcity, silver has set fashion and taste in Europe and America because of the prestige of the metal and of the craftmen who have worked it. Silversmiths like Paul Revere were men of great ecomonic, social and political importance in colonial America. Historic Deerfield has one of the finest collections of early American silver in the United States displayed in the vault of the Parker and Russell silver shop. The new pewter display in an adjacent room will now permit visitors to see how the prestige of silver influenced forms and fashions in pewter, brass and other allovs.

Historic Deerfield was founded in 1952 and now operates twelve historic houses with substantial collections of American decorative arts. The Deerfield, Massachusetts museum offers tours, public lectures and educational programs throughout the year.

Fine Arts Center Fall Preview

By Susan Baron

This month, the Fine Arts Center will open its 1982-1983 season, hosting a wide variety of productions that will result in its biggest year yet. Compared to last year's 22 FAC productions, this year will bring at least 32 different shows, including a newly formed orchestra and chamber series with a total of seven productions, as well as events in jazz, dance and theater.

Students will be able to subscribe to a series of tickets and will be extended a half-price student discount on tickets. Reservation forms will be sent to students. If tickets are not bought on the series basis, they will be available two to three weeks before a given show.

The season will commence on September 20 with none other than the Duke Ellington Orchestra, one of three shows included in the jazz series. In an effort to satisfy the increasing number of jazz enthusiasts, this year's scheduled jazz artists will meet the same level of excellence offered by last year's performances by Freddie Hubbard, Betty Carter and the incredible Big Six of Jazz.

Since Duke Ellington's death in 1974, Mercer Eliington has been at pains to maintain the music of his prolific father. Today's Duke Ellington orchestra, conducted by Mercer, includes such musicians as Harold Ashby, Money Johnson and Chuck Connors, whose association with Duke Ellington restore authenticity of style and interpretation.

Saxaphonist Dexter Gordon and Sarah Vaughn will also appear on separate dates to complete the jazz series. Not part of the actual package of jazz series tickets (but jazz nonetheless), The Preservation Hall Jazz Band will play on November 4. The band comes with no planned numbers to play, they play what they feel. Since the musicians have made musical history with New Orleans jazz, their performance is sure to result in foot-stomping and hand-clapping.

To widen the scope of music represented by the FAC, the classical music category will enjoy its most expanded program to date. Dutch soprano Elly Ameling will open the series of chamber music on October 15 and the Scottish National Orchestra, conducted by the nationally reputed Sir Alexander Gibson, will highlight the orchestra series on October 25. This orchestra is the direct offspring of the Scottish Orchestra, which has presented concerts in Scotland since 1891. Especially exciting about this show will be the exclusive performance of Mahler's 4th symphony, and an appearance by soprano Margaret Marshall.

To complete the Chamber Music Series are the Tokyo String Quartet, the New York Chamber Soloists and the stunning Primavera String Quartet. The New York Chamber Soloists have been performing a unique repertoire of over 250 works since 1957, encompassing song cycles, classical chamber works for winds and strings and over 25 compositions written by such notables as Gunther Schuller, Hugo Weisgal, Mario Davidovsky and Ezra Laderman. At their University of Massachusetts performance, the N.Y. Chamber Soloists will celebrate their 25th season with the performance of Bach's complete Brandenburg concerti.

In addition to the Scottish National Orchestra, the Springfield and Cincinatti Symphony Orchestras will perform on November 21 and March 15 respectively. The Cincinatti Symphony celebrates its 87th anniversary and is the country's fifth oldest orchestra. Michael Gielen will conduct the UMass performance. The Springfield Symphony Orchestra will feature Robert Gutter, conductor, and Jonathan Shames on piano.

Unfortunately, the category of dance has been cut to three productions in this year's program. Dance companies lost a lot of money in budget cuts last year and many are therefore unable to travel. Certainly, the Zagreb Grand Ballet, The Washington Ballet and the Bella Lewitzky Dance Company will make up for this. The Zagreb Ballet is one of the few major European companies yet to be seen and acclaimed in North America. Its repertoire ranges from the legendary ballets of Fokine, Petipa and Lichine to the major choreographers who followed them. The Washington Ballet features the works of Choo San Goh in a unique repertoire of contemporary and classical ballet. This young ensemble has been described as breathtaking by distinguished critics, and is racing toward national stature. Choreographer Bella Lewitzky is known for her spontaneous, improvisational and flawless style. Inherent in her dances is a comment on life and society, delivered by her young, professional dancers.

Perhaps the most familiar and popular form of art for the student audience is theatre. And to satisfy everyone's fancy, both the light and heavy-hearted will enjoy Annie and Evita. The Broadway touring company of Annie, the story of an orphan and a lovable billionaire, will be presented early in the semester on September 28-30. The dramatic Broadway touring company production of Evita, on May 3-5, is not to be missed and the show I'm Getting My Act Together and Taking it on the Road, starring Connie Stevens, will be presented on November 30 and December 1.

John Houseman's Acting Company will perform "Twelfth Night" and "Tartuffe."

The Acting Company will debut at UMass on March 16 and 17 when they present their interpretation of Twelfth Night and Tartuffe. The Acting Company comprises an innovative concept, being the only permanent professional theatre company founded for and dedicated to the development of American actors. The company was founded in 1972 (by John Houseman) and consists of 17 highly-trained actors and actresses selected from America's leading professional theatre training programs and regional theaters, including Julliard, Yale and Carnegie-Mellon.

For further listings of FAC events this year, refer to the schedule provided.

The Arts. Their future lies in our hands. Like everything else in our society, they thrive on support and patronage. Unlike many things in our society, they strive for perfection and offer an inevitably pleasurable experience. Don't pass them up. Enjoy the arts — music, theatre and dance — while they're still in their purest form.

Ridgemont High, which will open soon locally, was originally rated X but had its rating changed by the MPAA to R after a bathhouse love scene was trimmed of its male frontal nudity.... Producer Alexander Salkind has recently announced production of Santa Claus, billed as "the greatest living legend of all time."....Miles O'Keefe, star of Tarzan, The Ape Man will star as Ator, The Fighting Eagle. Word has it he's been taught how to speak for the new film...Roger Moore will again play James Bond in the 13th Bond flick, Octopussy. The film, directed by John Glen and co-starring Maud Adams (The Man with the Golden Gun), will open in June, 1983. Still no more word on Warhead, the long awaited Sean Connery Bond production....Warner Brothers has given the Will Rogers Institute permission to use footage from Hooper for a TV spot on auto safety....Sweden has banned the sale or rental of all violent videocassettes. The Texas Chainsaw Massacre and other "splatter" movies must be off dealers' shelves by August 21. Similarly, distribution of the videocassette Snuff has been cancelled in Britain....Four out-and-out comedies that look particularly promising are currently in production: The Man with Two Brains is the title of the newest Steve Martin flick; Dr. Detroit stars Dan Aykroyd as a crazy pimp; Monty Pythons' Meaning of Life should clear up some philosophical questions; and National Lampoon's Vacation offers us a family drive cross-country. Vacation, directed by Harold (Stripes) Ramis, stars Chevy Chase, Beverly D'Angelo and Christie Brinkley, with a screenplay by Chase, Ramis and John Hughes. All four films are due out next year....the controversial subject matter of Monsignor has caused distributor Twentieth Century Fox to push back its release from this Christmas to February. Christopher Reeve stars as a young priest with ties to the mafia who gets elevated to Cardinal and president of the Vatican bank, using his underworld contacts to secure funds for the holy Roman Church. Fox will substitute The Verdict with Paul Newman in the Christmas slot. The Verdict, which was to have opened in March, will now premiere on December 17....Pink Floyd-The Wall, a new film directed by Alan Parker, has already broken records. At an advance preview at the National Theater in Westwood, California, 800 tickets were sold out in just 11 minutes. The film stars Bob Geldof of the Boomtown Rats and is scheduled to be released locally sometime soon....Raymond Burr will play a judge in Paramount Pictures' Airplane II: The Sequal. The film will not be written or directed by the makers of the original....Makeup and hair stylists union Local 706 has been awarded $10,000 in a dispute with Universal Pictures over screen accreditation for The Thing. Local 706 attorney Julius Reich contended that Rob Bottin, credited in the film as providing "special makeup effects" did in fact not provide makeup. Reich argued that Bottin created numerous "mechanical devices, mannequins and non-living things," which did not qulify him to be credited in the makeup category.... Bob Fosse is directing Star 80, the biography of Dorothy Stratten, the late Playboy playmate. Mariel Hemingway will play the title role, Eric Roberts will play her murderous husband and Cliff Robertson appears as Hugh Hefner....Apparently, Jerry Lewis' recent film, Hardly Working, made money (awful as it was), so he'll begin work on a similar venture. Smorgasbord, written, directed and starring Lewis, begins filming this month. Meanwhile, The King of Comedy, which features Lewis in a dramatic role, opens this Christmas. The film stars Robert DeNiro as a loser who kidnaps talk show host Lewis and forces him to teach him how to become a stand-up comedian. The King of Comedy was directed by Martin Scorsese.... Ron Leibman will play a journalist in the film adaptation of Romantic Comedy to be directed by Arthur Hiller. Mary Steenbergen co-stars as a comedy writer who impulsively marries Leibman to get away from writing partner Dudley Moore.... The film took in $1,2000,000 in its first ten days in Germany. The sequal, Deeds Not Words, is being prepared....Mad Magazine will attempt another movie. Unlike its first venture, Up The Academy, the new film, called The Mad Magazine Movie, will be based on familiar Mad characters...Creepshow, the horror collaboration by writer Stephen King and director George Romero, will be released locally soon. Another King novel, Firestarter, will be directed by John Carpenter. The Dead Zone is also being readied for production, though no director has yet been signed....David Bowie and Catherine Deneuve play vampires in The Hunger. Susan Sarandon also stars as a gerontologist and Dick Smith will be doing makeup for the film. Smith is the special effects genius who did the makeup for The Exorcist and Altered States.... Halloween III: the Season of the Witch is more of a ghost story than the first two films. The slasher will not return and the film will not contain gory splatter effects; instead it will involve the supernatural and be more of a stylized Halloween tale....Word just in on Warhead, Irvin (Empire Strikes Back) Kershner will direct the new James Bond film. The film, a sequal to Thunderball, will star Sean Connery, who helped write the picture with spy writer Len Deighton, who was a friend of Ian Fleming. Warhead is intended for Christmas, 1983 release....Brimstone and Treacle, a new shock psychodrama starring Sting, has completed filming. . Mimes perform at festival

By Pam Madnick

The second annual New England Mime Festival was presented at Institute Park in Worcester on August 21. A collaboration of the East Coast's finest mime artists, musicians and jugglers, the show this year had new acts and more variety; something for everyone. The festival, which drew nearly 2,000 spectators, was supported in part by Summer's World, Piedmont Center for the Arts and The Mime Studio in Worcester.

A colorful opening, similar to last year's, captured everyone's attention. All the performers raced out onstage in three lines, except for two flame jugglers who stood at opposite ends of the stage. One by one, each mime peeked out at the audience. The front three mimes held giant, hand-made masks.

After the opening, Abbott and Judy Scalise, artist-in-residence at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, "clowned" around in a Marcel Marceau-like fashion. Abbott sat on a box studying Scalise's movements, then disappeared into the box. The children especially loved them.

Definitely a favorite this year, as well as last, was Belmont's Trent Arterberry. He is a middle-of-the-road mime, in that he wears the traditional white face, but also uses gibberish and contemporary music to help get his music across. In the first of his two pieces, he babysat an invisible baby. His face lit up when ever he looked down to the infant's face, but when he discovered the baby was wet, that expression changed to surprise, fear and embarassment. Upon that discovery, space-age music heightened the effect. Poor Trent.

A corporeal and eye-catching group called Pontine from Portsmouth, New Jersey combined ballet and mime in a piece called "In Trio." Moving in unison, three women built geometric shapes with dowels. At times, they would appear to be one unit, but then something would happen and the three would battle each other, repeating exactly the same footwork. Then two women would capture the third in their shapes and again become one unit.

The Studebaker Mime Company of Boston performed two pieces. The first, which was more aesthetically pleasing, was a farce about what happens in high school when a substitute teacher comes in to take over. It was funny because the teacher talked in gibberish. The second piece, a better example of Studebaker, was called "Genesis" and told the story of how life began through movement, dance and airy music. The timing was incredible and if there was one time in the whole show when things were perfect technically, this was it.

One of the funniest and most original performers was Annie Loui, from Boston, who displayed perfect concentration in "The Shoe Trilogy." As she and her life-sized puppet sat onstage, dozens of loose shoes were thrown at them. As each shoe hit close by, Annie would curiously walk over, study it until yet another would be tossed at her. She had so many shoes onstage everyone in the audience was whispering that she must have owned or worked in a shoe store. At the end, the puppet and the shoes mysteriously left the stage via clear strings.

Mirage of Boston, a group new to the New England Mime Festival, performed a balletic piece called "Splendidly Artificial." Wearing roaring twenties costumes and gliding across the stage to matching period music, the troupe proved to be better dancers than mimes.

Two Penny Theatre of Mt. Pieler, one of the better known groups, performed "Summer Love." I don't know what was funnier: the performers or their costumes. They wore exaggerated, ugly, caricatured masks. It was a piece easy to identify with; everyone has at one time in their life fallen hopelessly in love.

The New England Mime Festival provides an annual look at life through the eyes of a child. It makes you feel young again, to be able to relate to the mime's actions. Next year the festival will be presented in Worcester on August 20.

Peter Abbott, artistic director of the New England Mime festival.

Music at Amherst

By Andrew Gordon

The Amherst College Department of Music will again be presenting their annual Music at Amherst concert series. Eight concerts are planned, which will run throughout the year and feature internationally known talent.

This year's series will begin with The Deller Consort. Founded in 1950 by Alfred Deller, the ensemble will perform early music from the Courts of Europe. The date for this concert is October 2.

Next in the series, on Friday, October 22, is a performance by Yo-Yo Ma, one of the most sought-after cellists in the world, and Lydia Artymiw, an Amherst-based pianist who has been acclaimed internationally. They will be performing works by Schumann, Mendelsson and Rachmaninoff.

On Saturday, November 20, Rodney Hardesty, a counter tenor, will perform baroque (works by Handel, Dowland and Purcell) and contemporary music (compositions by Halloway, Ranier and Pinkham). Alexander Farkas will play keyboards.

Pianist Jorg Demus

The Sequoia String Quartet

The New England Chamber Orchestra will perform on Saturday, December 11. Under conductor Endel Kalam, they will be doing a Mozart piano concerto in E-flat, as well as pieces by Mendelssohn, Shostakovich and Bartok. Lydia Artymiw will play solo piano.

On Sunday, February 6, Harold Wright, Boston Symphony Orchestra principal clarinetist and pianist Luis Batlle will perform works by Weber, Dahl and Brahms.

The Sequoia String quartet, which was founded in 1972 and went on to win the prestigeous Naumberg Chamber Music Award, will play compositions by Beethoven, Janacek and Schubert on Saturday, March 5.

Music from Marlboro, on Saturday, March 12, features a sextet of chamber musicians (strings and piano). They will play Hindemith and Brahms.

Finishing off the concert series on Friday, April 29, will be Jorg Demus, a pianist of uncommon versatility and the recipient of an Amherst College honorary Doctorate in 1981. He will perform works by Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Debussy and Schumann.

Above: "The Selected Letters of Lewis Carroll," which offers a witty and revealing selection of letters written by the fanciful creator of "Alice in Wonderland," will be published in paperback this month.

Below: Poet James Tate, whose eighth book, "Hints to Pilgrims," has just been published. Tate is a former English teacher at the University of Massachusetts.

Regent quits, cites job commitments

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Correspondent

Arnold S. Friedman, editor of the Springfield Union and Sunday Republican, last week became the second member to resign from the two-year-old Massachusetts Board of Regents of Higher Education.

"It was a question of professional versus public service," Friedman said, citing "increased professional responsibilities" as the reason for his resignaion.

His duties as a Regent required that he attend several meetings in Boston each month, he said, causing him to miss a day of work each time.

"It was taking me away from work too much," Friedman said.

Earlier this summer, Friedman had expressed his opposition to the Board of Regents' rejection of the candidate for appointment as president of the Springfield Technical Community College (STCC). The STCC Board of Trustees recommended that Frank Gulluni, currently an aide to Springfield Mayor Theodore DiMauro, be appointed as STCC president.

The Board of Regents, citing his lack of administrative experience in higher education and lack of academic credentials, rejected Gulluni and asked that a new search be held. Friedman and Board Chairman James Martin, the only Springfield area members of the Regents, opposed the new search.

Friedman said the controversy over Gulluni had nothing to do with his resignation, but said he is confident the new search will result in Gulluni's appointment.

"If that were the reason for my resignation, I would have stayed," Friedman said, noting he would have more influence over the final decision if he were a member of the Regents.

He said he chose to resign at this time because "many of the goals of the Board have been achieved." The Regents were appointed in June, 1980 as part of the reorganization of higher education in Massachusetts which Friedman said is now well under way.

"I would like to thank Mr. Friedman for his service," said Rep. Jim Collins, D-Amherst. "I served with him on the special committee that investigated the status of public higher education in the state. He worked very hard."

Friedman's term would have expired in August, 1986. Regent Charles Sanders resigned last year when he left Massachusetts General Hospital to work for a pharmaceutical firm.

Three Regents' terms expired on August 1, 1982, and all three are currently being considered for re-appointment by Governor Edward J. King. Regents George Ellison, Elizabeth Rollins and George Hazzard are expected to be re-appointed, according to a representative in the Board's Office.

Friedman said he was "proud and happy to serve with the Regents," and said he was proud that "many of the major goals of the board have been achieved."

"I'm going to miss it," he said, "but I'll stay involved in education through the newspaper (the Springfield Union and Sunday Republican), so you'll still hear from me."

New 'express' add/drop in Student Union gets mixed reviews

By CRIS SCHUSTER
and PAUL BELVAL
Collegian Staff

The express add/drop instituted this semester in the Student Union Ballroom ran fairly smoothly, according to James Shaw, associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences Information and Advising Center (CASIAC).

Instituted this semester in an attempt to alleviate the frustration experienced by students who had to walk all over campus to adjust course schedules, the system included an "express drop" and repesentatives from 12 departments on hand to sign add forms.

However, some students questioned its success.

"I'm lost, I don't know what I'm doing, and no one will help," Alexandra Machenzie, 18, a freshman from Weston, said.

"It's a pain in the neck," said Beth O'Connor, 17, a freshman from Wellesley.

"I've moved about five feet in 20 minutes," said Jill Colman, 18, a freshman from Framingham who was still six feet from the registration desk.

Although Shaw admitted there were some problems with the procedure, he thought the process went fairly well.

"I think it saved a lot of students some shoe leather," Shaw said. "I think the students would like it better if we kept it in one room."

However, Shaw saw some problems with the express add/drop, such as disorganization and crowding.

"It could have gone better," Shaw said. "We didn't have the signs up when we opened and there was a lot of confusion."

"At nine, there just wasn't enough room, too," he said.

One of the people taking the add/drop forms from students agreed that crowding was a problem.

"It was busy this morning," Ken Rolt, 21, a journalism major from Stoughton said at the add/drop desk. "This place was mobbed. You couldn't even breathe."

Shaw said he would like to see the express add/drop continued in the future.

"I'd like to try it one more time to work some of the bugs out," Shaw said.

At least one student didn't share Shaw's enthusiasm though.

"I never want to do it again," Mackenzie said.

Gnomon Copy to begin strike for higher pay

By MIKE FOLEY
Collegian Staff

Employees at Gnomon Copy plan to abandon their copying machines, drop their paper work and pick up strike placards today.

A spokesperson for the employees yesterday said they want management to begin negotiations immediately for higher pay, job security, and better working conditions.

"I think they should be paying more money because they're making more money," said Mary Erin Crook, a Gnomon Copy employee. "They are trying to take advantage of the labor pool in the area."

Gnomon Copy management said it was unaware that a strike is to begin today, but maintained that pay was adequate and negotiations are set to begin in two weeks.

"The pay is abnormally high for the area," said Candy Iannacchino, who, with her husband, Roland Weatherbe, recently bought Gnomon Copy from the Cambridge-based corporation. "I have got 60 applications (for jobs), and the ad has run one day," she said.

"They think they got new people here and they're trying to push us," Iannacchino said.

"We took a vote to go on strike," said Crook, "but we would rather negotiate." Crook said Gnomon employees are paid between $3.55 and $5.80 an hour, and said no one has had a raise in 20 months.

Labor-management disagreements have plagued Gnomon Copy at 103 North Pleasant Street in Amherst for more than a year. Gnomon employees joined the United Electrical Union local 264 in May, 1981. A week-long boycott in November of last year decreased business by 80 percent, said Carol MacCall, a Gnomon employee.

"You got to draw the line somewhere," said MacCall. The new management has agreed to negotiate Sept. 22. But the employees say they feel they have waited long enough. They will strike during the busy first two weeks of the semester. "We feel we have the most leverage right now."

"What we are asking for is that they negotiate immediately, not in three weeks," Crook said. "We don't really know what they (the management) want. If they change their mind (and decide to negotiate) between now and 8 a.m. tomorrow morning, we won't go on strike," she said yesterday.

"We would much rather settle the issue," said MacCall.

Iannacchino said she and her husband knew there were labor problems when they bought the shop and began managing it several weeks ago, but they were unaware of the impending strike.

"I guess I'll be up a creek," she said. "We can't run a store without them; that's a plain simple fact."

Terrorists extend deadline to end martial law in Poland

BERN, Switzerland (AP) — Anti-communist terrorists threatening to blow up the Polish Embassy released four more hostages early today after extending by 48 hours their deadline for Poland to end martial law and free all political prisoners.

That brought the total of hostages freed to eight, and government spokesman Achille Casanova said the developments increased hopes of "more results and an end without bloodshed."

The gunmen were believed still to be holding at least four hostages.

Three women were freed first early today, then a man followed in less than an hour. Two hours before that, the terrorists released a 20-year-old Polish student who had been in the building when it was taken over by the raiders Monday. Three other women had been released late Monday and yesterday.

Casanova said Justice Minister Kurt Furgler was personally involved in the negotiations and "we are in steady telephone contact" with small band of gunmen that invaded the embassy Monday.

Playing a key role in the talks was an 80-year-old Polish-born theologian, Professor Joseph M. Bochenski, a resident of Switzerland. He spent an hour in the embassy Tuesday in the first face-to-face negotiations with the gunmen.

The terrorists originally issued an ultimaltum saying they would blow up the building at 10 a.m. Wednesday — 4 a.m. EDT — if Poland's communist government did not meet their demands.

One of the three women freed Tuesday said she saw "four raiders armed with long weapons." The invaders claimed they had enough dynamite to destroy the building, themselves and their hostages.

At dusk, police surrounding the embassy moved their road blocks farther away from the compound, raising speculation of an armed assault.

In Warsaw, the Foreign Ministry gave its formal permission for Swiss police to move into the embassy, which has extraterritorial status. It also asked Switzerland to permit Poland to send a "special group" here to help end the siege. It was believed the group would include members of an anti-terrorist commando squad.

Ulrich Hubacher, spokesman for Swiss federal police, has refused to rule out a police assault on the embassy, but another police official gave only a curt "no comment."

Hubacher said the terrorists have not backed off their demands, and added, "It's possible they will carry out their threat."

The terrorists, who call themselves "The Polish Revolutionary Home Army," are holding eight junior Polish diplomatic personnel and a Polish national who was visiting the embassy when it was seized Monday, Hubacher said.

Their leader, who gave his name only as Col. Wysocki, has said that if the demands are not met, he and his "anti-communist paramilitary squad" will blow up the embassy with 55 pounds of dynamite they claim to possess.

Herald reporter freed from jail by Executive Council vote

BOSTON (AP) — Saying "I'd do it again," a newspaper reporter was freed from jail yesterday when his contempt sentence was commuted after he had served eight days for refusing to testify in a murder trial.

Paul W. Corsetti of the Boston Herald American walked out of the Middlesex County jail after the state Executive Council voted 6-0 to approve Gov. Edward J. King's request to commute the 90-day sentence to time served.

The 33-year-old Corsetti praised the governor and the council for "great courage" and said he was grateful — but had not changed his mind about keeping his promise to a news source.

"I knew at the time I was violating the law," he told the council. "I believe firmly what I did was right."

Corsetti, the first reporter ever jailed in Massachusetts for refusing to testify, charged that the state Supreme Court's earlier failure to keep him out of jail had in effect shackled reporters.

"Did you see me with the handcuffs on my hands today?" he said after the hearing. "That's the point of it all. The Supreme Court in their ruling has handcuffed the press in Massachusetts ... It has a chilling effect on news sources in Massachusetts. In the ultimate long run, the public are the ones who are going to suffer."

Corsetti had refused to break a promise to Edward R. Kopacz Jr., that he would not testify about an interview in which Kopacz allegedly implicated himself in the 1978 murder of a male prostitute. Kopacz was acquitted of the murder.

Of his eight days in jail, Corsetti said, "It's an experience I will never forget as long as I live.

"I hope if there are any juveniles out there who have their eyes on a career of crime ... take a lesson and to understand that jail isn't fun, that it's a place where you're locked up most of the time. When those bars close, you're there all alone in an 8-by-6 cell."

Corsetti's lawyer, Thomas C. Troy, told the council his client acted "in light of a principle that he believed in."

Corsetti said, however, Troy has never sent him a bill over the long litigation.

"The paper is picking up the fees for the Supreme Court appeal...in Washington," Corsetti told an interviewer Tuesday afternoon.

"However, Tom (Troy) has not charged me a penny for the past 2¼ years."

Troy, the Boston criminal lawyer who appeared with Corsetti in an interview broadcast by WBZ-TV, said, "If you're interested, the bill is $217,000."

"His check is in the mail, by the way," said Corsetti jokingly.

"The paper offered me a lawyer in the beginning. They offered me a libel lawyer. This is a criminal case so I decided that I needed a criminal lawyer.

UMass offering course about crisis relocation

By HANNAH HOSOM
Collegian Staff

What does one do in the event of a nuclear attack? The Reagan administration advocates crisis relocation, but many people are unaware of all the proposal involves.

Dr. Rutherford Platt of the geography department at the University of Massachusetts is offering a course on the questions raised by crisis relocation.

"We just threw this together in June, so it's not in the course description booklet," said Platt, who added he believes this is the first course on this topic at the University, if not the country.

Topics of discussion will include practical planning as well as legal, moral and philosophical implications involved. Students will be involved in field studies, as well as documentary research on aspects which interest them, Platt said.

The actual class structure will be determined by those students who sign up. Platt said he would like to limit enrollment to 10 students, mostly due to the volume of documents the class will be working with.

Platt said he has arranged for a number of guest speakers from the Five-College community as well as the rest of the Pioneer Valley to speak to the class.

"It's definitely interdisciplinary," Platt said.

Any student interested should contact Dr. Platt by Friday at the Department of Geology/Geography. The course is listed for three credits, and will meet Tuesdays and Thursdays at 2:30 p.m. in Hills 317, beginning Tuesday, September 14.

If enough students contact Dr. Platt, a lottery will be held to determine who will be allowed to take the course, although Platt said the ten-student limit is "not absolutely ironclad."

BORN-AGAIN FRAT — The newly-opened Christian living home at the former site of the Alpha Delta Phi fraternity in the Fraternity/Sorority Park.

Christian home replaces ADP frat

By RICK ALMEIDA
Collegian Staff

The new Christian living home at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, Chi Rho, will open today with all rooms filled.

Fifty-two students will move into the co-educational home that "is here to bring UMass students to Christ," said Jerry Gates, who co-owns the house with area resident Richard Johnson. Gates is also the Chairman of the First Baptist Church Committee, and operator of the Christian Living program.

Gates and Johnson evicted the Alpha Delta Phi (ADP) fraternity from the Fraternity/Sorority Park location when low enrollment left ADP unable to pay the rent. The members of ADP now reside at what was the Theta Chi fraternity house.

Repairs have necessitated partial renovations to the house. Estimates of the damage range from $16,000 to $20,000. The renovations have been paid for with an $18,000 grant from the First Baptist Church and volunteer work from several Christian organizations.

While the house calls itself "The Christian Living Alternative," boarders need not be Christian. Gates says that Islamics, Buddhists and Jews, as well as Protestants, are sharing the predominantly Catholic home. Boarders come from countries as diverse as Haiti, Syria, and Japan.

The idea for a Christian living facility first came to light during the Billy Graham crusade. "There's been a lot of cooperation from the Christian groups in the area, and we expect some Christian growth," Gates said.

The house has been filled for some time, despite a late start in the recruiting process. The home will house twenty-six men and twenty-six women, self-segregated into separate floors.

Other details of daily house life have not yet been decided, but Gates expects the rules to be similar to those of any living area, with a leaning towards Christianity. Meetings throughout the week should lead to a finalization of the rules.

Gates likens the house to those on the campuses of several large Southern schools, particularly Auburn University. He cites the great interest in the house, evidenced by the fact that he said he has already turned-away many applicants, as a sign that "this is a good mission field."

Red Cross looks for record total in blood donor drive

By KEN LUNDBERG
Collegian Staff

The Red Cross Bloodline program at the University of Massachusetts, the largest volunteer blood donations source in western Massachusetts, collected 72 pints of blood yesterday in its first day of operation this fall.

UMass Red Cross Coordinator Mary Andrews said the total amount of pints given through the blood drive at the University this year should top last year's record of 4,000.

Of the 72 donors that visited the Red Cross headquarters in the Campus Center, a conference room filled with collapsable beds and equipment, two persons received special two-gallon pins for donating blood for their six-teenth time and two persons received one-gallon pins for donating blood an eighth time. Andrews calls these persons "regulars."

Andrews said the strongest way to attract the apprehensive, first-time donator is through the blood drives scheduled for the fall in single dormitories because students feel more at home and safe when going through what is a simple process that in the end most people laugh at anyway. This is also a case, Andrews said, where peer pressure can be a very positive aspect.

Recruiting blood donors, though, is only the first step the American Red Cross uses to move blood along to blood banks throughout the nation. After registered nurses with Red Cross certification have attended donors, the blood collected is turned over to a technician who will then transport the blood to the Red Cross blood services lab in Springfield. There, the blood will be bagged, typed, tested, stored and frozen for hospitals in the area to purchase on a cost recovery basis.

Everywoman's Center needs volunteers and interns to aid needy, oppressed women

By CRIS SCHUSTER
Collegian Staff

Volunteer positions and internships are currently available at the Everywoman's Center at the University of Massachusetts.

The center is university funded and offers many services to area women. The center is particularly committed to meeting the needs of underprivileged and oppressed women.

Credit is available for undergraduate students for most of the positions. Training will be provided if needed.

The Counseling Program is looking for graduate students to provide services to Third World women, lesbians, and working women.

Counselor/Advocates are needed to serve in a program aimed at helping the survivors of rape and their families. Volunteers must have a background in counseling and interested individuals must be willing to be on call for evenings each month, and must have access to a phone and transportation.

Women interested in minority service are needed for the Third World Program. They would be involved in workshop planning, publicity, and advocacy for the needs of the Third World Community.

The Center's resource room needs volunteers to provide information about social and educational resources and medical and legal referrals, and to maintain the resource files.

For further information and applications, those interested should contact the Everywoman's Center in Wilder Hall at 545-8330.

New journalistic studies director seeks to upgrade program's status

By PAUL BELVAL
Collegian Staff

Upgrading the journalistic studies program's status to that of a department, increasing the full-time staff, and acquiring computer terminals are some of the goals the new director of the program has set for the future.

James Boylan, the newly elected director of the journalistic studies program, said he wants to see his department make the changes necessary to keep up with the advancing technology in the field and the increasing number of students studying journalism at UMass.

Boylan worked for This Week magazine, a Sunday newspaper supplement, as an editor before joining the faculty of the Columbia University journalism department in 1957.

While at Columbia, he was the founding editor of the Columbia Journalism Review, and served as editor-in-chief of that trade publication from 1961 to 1969 and from 1976 to 1979.

Boylan began as a part-time professor at UMass in 1977, and worked full-time beginning in 1979.

Boylan said raising the status of journalistic studies to a department would facilitate national accreditation and fund raising; two areas the program has been pursuing.

"(Becoming a department) would allow us to control our own destiny," he said. "It would help with recruiting faculty and we would have some better opportunity to raise money for ourselves."

Boylan said this money would come from national foundations and news organizations.

He also said he wants to see the program's full-time faculty increased from its current seven positions. Of these seven professors, four are available full-time.

Two of the full-time professors are on sabbatical in other countries. Sara Grimes is in China for a second year, and Howard Ziff will be spending the coming year in Austria. A third full-time professor, Ralph Whitehead, has been working in the UMass president's office and is only available to teach about 40 percent of the time, Boyland said.

"One additional position would help tremendously," he said.

Boylan said he also hopes to get computer terminals for the program, possibly from manufacturers or news organizations that would be willing to donate them.

"I'm very hopeful there will be a good deal of this stuff available," he said.

Despite these changes, Boylan said the basic course of study will not change.

"We have a curriculum that's working reasonably well, and I'd like to see it continue," he said. "We're going to continue the basic curriculum which is not to overwhelm the student with a lot of technical courses. We're very happy in the humanities setting."

Need Work?

The Collegian still has a few jobs available. We need a copy editor to work one night a week. Some writing or newspaper experience is needed. Low pay, but great experience.

We also need a couple of drivers who are willing to stay up late to drive the pages of the paper to our printer in Ware once or twice a week. A car, of course, is necessary. Pays a flat rate per trip.

Interested UMass students should apply in person as soon as possible to Ed Levine in the Collegian, 113 Campus Center.

The Collegian is an equal opportunity employer.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

One Thousand and One Uses for Lint

And so the year begins. As usual I approach this column with more than a little trepidation. Each semester the "welcome back" column adorns all pages of the Collegian. Ranging from cute and witty to dull and obnoxious, the columns serve to introduce new readers and reacquaint old ones with the weekly columnist. What follows is a guide for the editorial page neophyte, a road map of sorts to help you better understand the op-ed page.

John F. Hudson

1)The angry column — The person who writes this type of column is mad at everything. With subject matter ranging from bad bus schedules to bombing in Beirut, the writer proceeds to bitch, moan and groan about everything and anything under the sun. For this person nuclear holocaust is inevitable, famine is just around the corner and the herpes epidemic has entered our very living rooms. This columnist has raised cynicism to an art form and makes the grim reaper look like Bambi. It's best to read this piece on a raw, rainy Monday over a cold cup of coffee from the Hatch.

2)"So cute you could throw up" column — This type of piece is characterized by banality and triviality. Such "cute" columns dwell on subjects like roommates and classes and make them seem even duller than they already are. Headlines such as "Houseplants Can Be Fun" and "1001 Uses for Lint" will usually cue the reader and serve as a warning for the semi-digested pabulum which is to follow. It is best not to read these at all but, if you must, it is advisable to be within reach of a washable bucket or container.

3)The Generic Protest Column — The protest column, usually unique to left-wing and college newspapers, is characterized by oppression, -isms and ominous warnings for the future. The author of this piece has been oppressed since before his or her conception, a victim of mans inhumanity to man. Words such as racism, sexism, and anti-semitism jump off the page threatening to bury the reader in a torrent of emotional rhetoric and tired cliches.

Why is it generic? Columns like this are basically the same, with only the names being changed to inform the reader. It is best to read this while drinking herb tea from the Earthfoods, while on your way to Hampshire College for your Five-College course,"Oppression for Beginners".

I hope, that in some small way, this guide will help you better understand this, the editorial page. As a page it is a unique and vital part of any newspaper, serving as both a forum for ideas and issues and a marketplace for majority or minority opinion. Whether it be nuclear war or over-subscribed classes, anything from attack planes to acne will likely be examined in some way on the op-ed page this year. I hope that in some way I may be able to amuse, enrage or provoke the readers of the editorial page. Obviously if you've read this far I must be doing something right. Oh, and by the way, welcome back.

When Routine Grinds to a Halt

It's tough getting excited about the start of school.

I love UMass, but the adrenalin squeeze which would race up and down my spine when I thought about the start of classes, well, it's just an annoying tickle in my nose now.

Everyone knows that routines get boring quickly, but has any effort been made to revitalize the fun of those first few grade school years? Remember when the whole of your identity was based on a construction paper crown with your name on it? And when the best indication that school was approaching with a rabid frenzy was when Mom took you shopping for a new lunch box? Now, it's hard enough getting to class, let alone learning the names of your classmates. (At this point, I don't even have a lunch for my box, ever since I discovered I could harvest penicillin from my most recently purchased loaf of bread.)

Mary Beth Hebert

Even the art of getting educated is not as open to critical acclaim as it once was. After you learn to read and write, isn't the rest sort of anti-climactic? Last semester, I sent home an "A" paper which I had worked on for weeks. Mom sent me back a note thanking for the extra scrap paper and commented on how neat my printing had become. And remember how great it was when your parents would pay you off for getting good grades? And the subjects were so easy — penmanship, good conduct, personal hygiene. No wonder how my boyfriend's little brother can afford to loan me money at only thirty percent interest.

Once seen from this perspective, it's easy to understand how the loss of educational goodies could get discouraging. So why persevere?

Well, there's the obvious, "Being educated means never having to say, 'I'm working'." For many, the college experience is a good way of staying out of the Real World. And it's one of the most incredibly productive ways of doing nothing there is.

College can also be a person's first valuable experience with living with lots of people his own age. Forget the years at Camp Win-A-Bago. Dorm life is like being on the set of the "Little Rascals" version of Caligula. And when you move to an apartment, life becomes a cross between "The Newlyweds" and "Let's Make A Deal". With a bit of "The Smurfs"thrown in for good measure.

Despite the allure of an almost non-stop social circuit, students will usually make an effort to get something out of the college courses in their chosen field of study. Even the dreaded "core requirements" can occasionally leave a student with a few interesting odds and ends of information.

Maybe it's not that bad being back after all. Maybe this semester will be different. Maybe I won't have to stand in lines on registration day. Maybe I'll never miss the bus when we get hit with pouring rain. Maybe I'll have all my exams on different days...Whom am I kidding? Maybe I'll just take this semester off.

Dukakis — An Angry Look Back from a Local Resident

To the Editor:

It is often said that time is a great healer of wounds. Judging from the endorsements given to Mike Dukakis by the Massachusetts Teacher's Association, and the Massachusetts Society of Professors, it appears that some old wounds have been healed. "Dukakis has changed." Has he really? Does giving a bland promise of supporting public higher education really indicate that he will do so?

Does anyone seem to remember his four years of level funding the University's budgets; violations of its autonomous standing; and broken promises about pay raises to name a few examples of his concern and committment for the University. These wounds are hard to heal, or at least they should be.

Dukakis talks about Gov. King's "hidden taxes" and Dukakis' supporters on this campus gleefully use the recent tuition hikes as a good example. Yes, tuition costs have increased, and this may hurt Gov. King. But at least he hasn't tried to gloss them over with glib rhetoric.

In early May, Dukakis told students and faculty members that tuitions did not rise while he was Governor. The truth is that in 1975, tuition was $300 a year. When Dukakis left office in 1979, the tuition cost was $525 a year. He also promised a moratorium for tuitions. Remember his "lead pipe guarantee" against higher taxes? He's hoping that you won't, after all, that's another wound to heal.

Speaking of "hidden taxes"; did you know that in 1976, Dukakis's hand picked Management Task Force recommended a $90 increase in dorm fees; a 66 percent increase in Campus Center Fees; and a per capita charge for each student to ride the free PVTA?

The items above serve as fine examples of what Dukakis doesn't want you to remember. After all, why allow for more wounds to open up and festering sores from past to remind you about the real and hidden Dukakis? If indeed he has "changed," he has a long way to go to prove it. If he hasn't "changed" and is elected, the University will only face more level funding, and broken committments. Hasn't the University suffered enough from Dukakis?

Uranium waste dump radiation worries citizens in western Pennsylvania town

CANONSBURG, Pa. (AP) — Long before the atomic bomb, long before nuclear power plants, residents of this western Pennsylvania community lived with wastes buried by nuclear pioneers.

Uranium processing plants, which once supplied scientist Marie Curie with radium and later helped toward building the Hiroshima and Nagasaki bombs, produced more than 200,000 tons of radioactive waste since 1911. The wastes now lie beneath an industrial park near this quiet, residential suburb, about 20 miles southwest of Pittsburgh.

Saying they fear for their health, residents of Canonsburg and nearby Strabane long have urged the federal government to speed up plans for cleaning up the site.

But necessary government standards, which were to be in place by 1979, are almost three years late.

"When you didn't know, you weren't afraid. Now when you know, you're afraid. It's better not knowing," said Sophie Winseck, who unwittingly used an old vat from the processing plant to catch rainwater in her backyard.

Scientists, however, report finding only slightly higher rates of illness among those living near the radioactive site.

Standard Chemical Co. extracted radium from ore at the site in 1911. Later, the site was taken over by Vitro Corp. of America, which processed uranium and radium, burying its waste there. The Atomic Energy Commission later used the property for storage.

The industrial park is among 24 sites identified under the Uranium Mill Tailings Radiation Control Act of 1978 as requiring prompt cleanup.

The U.S. Department of Energy found "higher-than-acceptable" radioactive emissions from radon gas and radium at the site in 1977. Up to a third of a mile from the site, the emissions range from two to three times the normal background levels. Within that area, the risk of lung cancer would be about 25 percent higher, according to Department of Energy consultants.

The Canonsburg site is the only one east of the Mississippi River and the only one surrounded by residents — about 8,000 of Canonsburg's 11,000 residents live within one mile of the facility.

Decontamination of the industrial park and nearly 100 adjacent private properties has been stalled while government agencies finish reviewing Environmental Protection Agency standards for the cleanup.

Angered by the delay, about 100 residents have filed class-action lawsuits against the state and federal governments, six government agencies and seven corporations.

The residents claim their health has been endangered and their property values lowered because of radioactive contamination.

"My husband has leukemia, and then they tell me not to worry. I worry every day," said Isabella Spinosa, who lives about 500 feet from the industrial park.

University of Pittsburgh researchers assured residents at a town meeting last month that radiation levels are not alarming.

"The radioactive effects — if they are there — are very, very slight....I assure you this is not a serious problem that is out of control," Dr. Edward Radford said following a two year study funded by the EPA.

"Frankly, I would live there," said Dr. Evelyn Talbott, a native of Strabane.

Both researchers said they found slightly higher rates of illness among adults living within 600 yards of the industrial park as compared to those living in Muse, a community four miles away.

Gubernatorial hopefuls enter the final stretch

BOSTON — A blitzkrieg of appearances and advertisements by the Democratic candidates and a televised confrontation among the Republicans will highlight the final week of the Massachusetts primary election campaigns for governor.

Strategists for the two Democrats and three Republicans say they don't expect any single development in the final days to have a major impact in the Sept. 14 election since the candidates have been hammering away at one another for months. But embattled Republican candidate John Lakian says the Republican debate will play a pivotal role in the election.

The large number of voters who tell pollsters they remain undecided present an inviting target for the final push, which comes after a Labor Day weekend full of campaign stops by most contenders.

"The candidates have established track records and are too well known for most voters to be jarred by a single development in the last week," says Roy Lyons, campaign spokesman for Gov. Edward J. King. "I don't see anything coming out of the woodwork that could have that great of an effect."

Polls indicate King continues to trail former Gov. Michael S. Dukakis in the Democratic primary battle, which has developed into a bitter contest centering on the candidates' personalities instead of a matchup between the conservative King and more liberal Dukakis. The margin of Dukakis' lead varies, but several polls still peg it at 20 points.

Police offer protection from escaped murderer

NORWOOD — Witnesses whose testimony helped send Leroy Chasson to prison were offered protection yesterday from the convicted killer who escaped from Norwood Hospital with the help of a woman believed to be his gun-toting wife.

"If anyone who testified during the course of the trial feels that he or she might be in jeopardy, we ask them to contact the State Police, and we will take the necessary precautions," said William Delahunt, Norfolk County district attorney.

Delahunt, who called Chasson a "very dangerous" man, said his office had received no calls for help.

"I presume these people are of the opinion there is no danger," said Delahunt.

Delahunt did not identify any witnesses. But he said Chasson was arguing with Kevin Racette of Quincy when the killing occurred. The victim and Robert Haywood, 28, of Brockton were stabbed when they intervened, according to testimony during the trial.

Haywood could not be reached by telephone at a Brockton address. Racette was not at a Quincy telephone answered by a man who identified himself as Racette's brother and said he did not know Racette's whereabouts.

The district attorney said the hunt for Chasson, 33, serving a life term for the 1977 killing of the 20-year-old son of a Boston police officer, had spread outside Massachusetts.

"We are not confining our efforts to the state," he said without elaborating.

Chasson, born in Rumford, Maine, and two companions were arrested in Fryeburg, Maine, Aug. 28, 1977, five days after Paul Melody of Quincy was stabbed at Pageant Field in Quincy. Chasson was found guilty June 1, 1978, of first-degree murder in the killing and sentenced to life in Walpole State Prison.

Supreme Court denies rapist doctors' release

WASHINGTON — A Supreme Court justice yesterday refused to release from prison two Boston doctors who were convicted of raping a nurse, court officials said.

Justice William J. Brennan, without comment, turned down an emergency request for bail from Drs. Arif Hussain and Alan Lefkowitz. The doctors asked to be freed pending further legal moves in the case.

They were convicted in June 1981, along with Dr. Eugene Sherry, of the unaggravated rape of a 28-year-old nurse who worked at a Boston hospital.

The three doctors recently were stripped of their licenses to practice medicine in Massachusetts.

She testified that the doctors took her from a party in Boston, drove her to a beach house north of the city and forced her to have sexual relations with them.

The three men started serving six-month prison terms after their convictions were upheld by the state's highest court July 1.

Hussain and Lefkowitz told Brennan they had asked a federal trial court in Boston to overturn their convictions. That request has not yet been acted on, the doctors said.

The two doctors, both 31, asked Brennan to let them out of prison until the lower court can consider that request.

Among other things, Hussain and Lefkowitz claim they were unable to cross-examine sufficiently the rape victim during their trial.

Attorney Thomas C. Troy, who represents Hussain, said Tuesday he plans to file further action in the Massachusetts Supreme Court in a few weeks.

Arab peace strategies discussed in Morocco

FEZ, Morocco — Arab leaders conferred in strict secrecy yesterday at a summit meeting convened to define a possible Arab peace strategy in the Middle East for the first time since the creation of the state of Israel.

The summit was formally opened Monday by the host and chairman, Morocco's King Hassan II, with a warning to the leaders to allow no premature information leaks out of the closely guarded conference center.

Official Moroccan sources said the kings, emirs and presidents remained locked in intensive debate until after 3 a.m. yesterday morning and resumed their talks seven hours later.

The sources gave no indication of the subjects discussed, but pointed out that the Israeli invasion of Lebanon and its aftermath took top place on the published summit agenda.

Lebanon has asked the summit to demand that all foreign forces — "Israeli, Palestinian and Syrian" — should evacuate all Lebanese territory without delay.

It was clear, however, that the most important discussions will center on two Arab peace plans that envisage a general Arab recognition of Israel, and a third plan put forward by President Reagan proposing creation of an autonomous Palestinian "domestic authority" in association with Jordan.

The Reagan plan was welcomed by many Arab moderates but rejected by the Israeli Cabinet and the most militant Arab hard-liners. It was virtually certain to overshadow the peace plans put forward by Saudi Arabia and Tunisia, though it was not formally listed on the summit agenda.

The Saudi plan would require Israel to evacuate all Arab territory occupied since the 1967 war, including the Golan Heights and the Arab sector of Jerusalem. The Tunisian plan would reduce Israel to three disconnected enclaves envisaged by the United Nations in 1947. The Israeli state was founded in 1948.

Bush says reducing nuclear arms, helping out poor concerns Reagan

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — To a cheering convention of fellow Episcopalians, Vice President George Bush pledged on Monday the Reagan administration's commitment to helping the poor and to negotiating a nuclear arms reduction with the Soviet Union.

"We will stay with them at the negotiating table for however long it takes in order to reduce nuclear arms in a verifiable way," he said. He urged the churches to insist that both sides be willing to show they are living up to their word about it.

"We will go the extra mile," he said. "But movement requires the Soviet Union to open up to permit total verification."

Bush said the administration opposes a nuclear freeze, as advocated by many church people, but instead wants "real verifiable reductions in nuclear weapons."

Recounting initiatives for that purpose by previous administrations, he said:

"Now, we want to do more. Settling for a freeze at current levels would be like taking care of a washed-out road by putting up signs that say, 'Drive Carefully!' We've got to try to get off the road entirely."

Bush said the Reagan administration is committed both to peace and to bettering the lot of the poor, but that disagreement over means has led to assumptions the administration does not hold those objectives.

"In some quarters the cry has gone up that this administration does not care about the poor, the hungry, the underprivileged," he said. "Our severest critics assail us as unconcerned."

Reagan presents civilian award to ambassador for 'heroic work'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, ending a 17-day California vacation, returned to the White House late yesterday to present the nation's highest civilian award to ambassador Philip C. Habib for "truly heroic work" toward peace in the Middle East.

Habib, a 62-year-old diplomat who has suffered two heart attacks and has undergone multiple bypass surgery, spent nearly three months in the Mideast negotiating the settlement of the war in Lebanon and the evacuation of Palestinian guerrillas from Beirut.

"This peaceful step could never have been taken without the good offices of the United States and especially the truly heroic work of a great American diplomat, Ambassador Philip Habib," Reagan said last week.

Reagan's presentation of the Medal of Freedom to Habib and a round of meetings between the two on Wednesday were intended to focus attention on the Middle East peace initiative that the president announced last week.

Despite Israel's rejection of the plan and its defiance of Reagan's call for a freeze on new Jewish settlements in the occupied West Bank and Gaza strip, the administration held out hope that Israel eventually would soften its position.

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said the United States hopes that "as time goes by, the lure of peace will be more attractive."

At Reagan's invitation, Habib's wife accompanied the president and his party on the cross-country flight aboard Air Force One from California to Washington, so she could stand at her husband's side during the White House ceremony.

THE WHITMORE CHALLENGE — John Allen, a continuing education student from Amherst, completes the "Outrageous Obstacle Course" set up yesterday on Haigas Mall as part of First Week '82.

Women charge El Salvador troops bombed villagers in San Vicente

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Three peasant women claim government troops used fighter-bombers, grenades and automatic weapons to massacre 300 unarmed villagers during a recent antiguerrilla drive.

The government denies the charges made during a news conference organized Monday by the Salvadoran Human Rights Commission, which is generally considered to be careful about confirming such charges.

The women claimed U.S.-built A-37 fighter-bombers, incendiary bombs, hand grenades and automatic weapons were used to wipe out peasants who had been corralled into an area of San Vicente province dominated by leftist guerrillas.

The women, who requested anonymity, said the victims were mostly guerrilla supporters living in Amatitan Arriba, about 45 miles east of San Salvador.

They said no armed insurgents were present when the purported attacks began Aug. 18.

"The people tried to leave through the valleys and they cornered them. They killed a mountain of people, children, old people and women," one woman said.

Allegations of massacres surface during almost every major military operation — most recently during a June sweep in Chalatenango province in which rebels claimed hundreds of civilians were killed. Those reports were never confirmed.

A military spokesman, asked about the news conference, said yesterday that it is a common rebel tactic to claim that guerrillas killed were civilians. "This is misinformation," he said.

Chinese 'rectification campaign' to peacefully improve government

PEKING (AP) — Pledging to "cure the illness to save the patient," the Chinese Communist Party shows no sign of turning its long-awaited purge into a bloody persecution like those carried out by the late Chairman Mao Tse-tung.

The "rectification campaign" promises to be a peaceful affair designed to fortify the party's 39 million membership over a three-year period beginning late next year.

Unlike the persecutions launched by Mao during the anti-rightist campaign and Cultural Revolution, this campaign will stress education and persuasion, criticism and self-criticism.

It will also study current pragmatic policies and reforms, with a plan to revamp the party power structure to bring in younger, better-educated leaders.

After four years, every party member will have to re-register. Those who don't measure up to standards will be expelled or asked to withdraw.

The actual number kicked out of the party will be "very tiny," according to Zhu Muzhi, culture minister and spokesman for the party's current 12th congress.

Some foreign and diplomatic observers say the sedate, protracted nature of the purge indicates the current pragmatic leadership of Deng Xiaoping isn't strong enough to perform radical political surgery with swift expulsions.

Deng has long wanted to weed out obstructionist leftists, remnants of the radical "Gang of Four" and die-hard Maoists. A limited purge was in the works more than two years ago but had to be abandoned because of opposition, according to Chinese and diplomatic sources.

not be a strike. As Jean Fugett wrote in last Sunday's "New York Times," "economic arguments have little meaning to a guy fulfilling his lifelong dream who is afraid to lose that chance."

The NFLPA claims it has 90 percent backing of the players. 60-70 percent is probably more accurate. Teams will fill out their rosters with rookies, free-agents, and walk—ons and the games will go on. The networks have said that they will televise the games, as long as enough talent is available. Let's face it, if they put the games on TV, fans will watch. Even Ed Garvey must realize that under those circumstances, a strike would be mostly ineffective.

The players are athletes first, businessmen second. How do you tell Dan Fouts and the Chargers to strike after they start the season 4-0? The Management Council, the owner's labor wing, delivers a new collective bargaining proposal to the players this week. They will offer a 20 percent pay increase or something (like $40,000) in the form of a bonus to all players.

The feeling here is that the players will take the offer, or a counter-offer by the owners. We will be spared a prolonged and nonsensical strike. If, however, I am proven wrong, what is the hard-core NFL football fan to do?

Again, not to worry! A toll free, 24-hour hotline will be installed in my apartment, specifically geared to the counselling and treatment of addicted NFL football fans. All—night poker games; listening to good music (NFL Films has put out an album of their bone-crunching music); increased study, attendance, and betting on the college football game; and spending time with other NFL hard-core fans (you know, the ones, they know everything about Earl Morral and absolutely nothing of Earl Warren) will get us all through a very difficult time. Hopefully, we will not have to resort to these measures.

King breaks from stereotype with new novel

DIFFERENT SEASONS
By Stephen King
Viking Press, 527 pages ($16.95)

By KEN LUNDBERG
Collegian Staff

In the last eight years or so, Stephen King has made the giant skin of a pop readership crawl with tales of deep horror and the supernatural, though his ability to write outside the horror fiction genre has repeatedly been in question. Even Danse Macabre, King's horror textbook (released just last year), is a departure from his usual full-length fright only in that it is non-fiction. This still left King's name labeled within a genre he admits to being mortally involved.

So finally the master of terror has made his bid to be recognized as something other than a possessed storyteller with his latest work Different Seasons. Bound in this best-seller is a collection of tales which include nothing of the occult, monsterous, or apocalyptic although there is a careful hint of fear in each story — a similar seasoning.

The first of the four stories, or novellas "Hope Springs Eternal: Rita Hayworth and the Shawshank Redemption" is a clever prison escape narrative as told by an inmate-entrepreneur named Red who ultimately discovers the enduring bid of a fellow prisoner, Andy Dufresne, to get on the outside.

"First the chipping and shaping, and then the almost endless polishing and finishing with those rock blankets. Looking at them (a pair of cuff links Dufresne has given him in exchange for a favor), I felt the warmth that any man or woman feels when he or she is looking at something pretty, something that has been worked and made — that's the thing that really separates us from the animals, I think — and I felt something else, too. A sense of awe for the man's brute persistence." Thus speaks Red in this one man character study he has developed while describing Dufresne's "cultivated type." A convicted murderer who, while making a living behind bars from his former banking experience, plods along even when up against the brutal sexual advances of the prison's population of "sisters." This is the most unconventional of King's four novellas in that it gives off a certain warmth, in its description of the decision of a man to take his guilt or innocence into his own hands.

The second and longest narrative "Summer of Corruption: Apt Pupil" is an effective but often cutesy look at the secret relationship between a California high school student and the leftover, Nazi war criminal he discovers in his small suburb. In this account of a disappointing find, King is equally disappointing. He has turned the reader off while going overboard in his use of pop images. The description of the boy, for example, is so airy and easily identified with that there is nothing left for the sake of apprehension — nothing to probe the subconscious — a trademark King is best-known for.

The pace quickens though with "Fall from Innocence: The Body" a tale of a more psychological sort where horror writer Gordon Lachance treks into some Maine woods and in spooky pilgrimmage finds the rotting corpse of a teenager. Maybe just as King has been frustrated writing in the horror market, so does Lachance feel himself trapped. Making "revelations that cost you dearly only to have people look at you in funny ways not understanding what you've said at all, or why you thought it was so important that you almost cried while you were saying it."

The closing novella "A Winter's Tale: The Breathing Method" is surely the most polished piece of writing King has ever come up with. It is bound to give any of his big fans a goosebump or two. This is, in fact, where the author (who has for the last decade been churning out 1,500 words per day) finally proves himself the master. King imagines for us a New York City men's club who's members get together for a pre-Christmas storytelling session. However, on this certain night every year only the most bizarre events prevail. And so King gives the oaken floor over to Dr. Emlyn McCaron who spins a long-ago yarn about a gruesome childbirth. It is in this chiller that King points out the inscription above the fireplace in the men's club at 2498 which reads: "It is the tale not he who tells it."

Will the NFL strike?

The possibility of a strike hovers ominously over the National Football League as the 1982-3 season begins this week. The football owners are still getting high from the ink used to sign their $2 billion dollar television contract with CBS, NBC, and ABC. They are guaranteed a profit just by opening up their doors, even if their team finishes 2-14 and fills only a quarter of its stadium.

The football players want a part of this obscenely lucrative pie. It is true that football players average less money than their counterparts in professional baseball, basketball, and hockey. It is also true that football is the most demanding sport in terms of getting bodies bruised.

Football players are not underpaid, undernourished, or starving. They are merely grossly underpaid in comparison with the other sports.

The NFLPA (the Players Association) is demanding 55 percent of the gross revenues, stating that "we are the game." Ed Garvey, the players representative, has chosen a path with a sliding pay scale to reward years of service, games started, awards won, etc. This contrasts with baseball, which pushed for player mobility (free-agency) and which allowed teams to bid for a player's services. Free-agent compensation in the NFL is so steep that players are pretty much bound to their clubs.

It is recognized by the football owners that some form of concession must be made to the Players Association. It is this 55 percent figure that is the deciding and singular issue which may cause the players' walkout.

If the players do walk, they will do so between the fourth and fifth week of the season. After the third game of the season, the players would be eligible for their pension money for the year, and no one is dumb enough to walk before then.

There are great differences between the baseball strike of 1981 and this year's football situation. The baseball players were 99 percent united, with very little arm-twisting. They were fighting for what they had won in the courts five years earlier: the retention of free-agency, which changed the salary structure of baseball. The baseball owners had prepared for the strike by purchasing so much strike insurance that it was more profitable for low-drawing teams like the Minnesota Twins to keep their doors shut.

Also, baseball players average careers of eight seasons, with 15-20 years of major league service not being uncommon. They sacrificed a very low percentage of their career. And they were the only game in town. College baseball was long over by June of '81, and there was no new pro baseball league breathing down its back. All of which made the strike more advantageous to baseball players and owners than it would be for football players and owners.

Like the sports they represent, baseball's strike had no time limit, no clock to fight. After two months of inactivity, players picked up where they left off and finished the season with the playoffs and World Series intact. Football would be fighting a clock. Negotiators must realize that they have to run their "2-minute negotiations drill" in order to salvage the season once a strike is declared.

All this leads me to believe that there will

WILL SAM BAM BE BAMMIN' ALL SEASON? — The thought of a player's strike looms over the NFL.

Men's tennis outlook is 'cautiously optimistic'

by DAN LEBERFELD
Collegian Correspondent

UMass mens varsity tennis coach Bob Szlosek is cautiously optimistic about the up and coming fall season. This stems from Szlosek's extremely optimistic outlook before his initial season last year. The Minutemen finished a disappointing 6—10 last spring.

Since no players were lost to graduation, the team will remain basically the same.

Szlosek did add a blue chip recruit to the squad by the name of Stuart Goodman. Goodman, who is a native of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, is currently ranked 15th in the middle states and has national level experience. He could challenge the top singles players from last year and play as high as number two.

Coming back from an injury that kept him sidelined last spring to play number one singles is senior Neal Mackertich. He had a successful summer competing in tournaments. His biggest victory was over New England's top ranked player Bud Schultz.

Other players expected to play singles are junior Nick Julian, senior Steve Jordan and local product sophomore Rich Lindgren of Amherst.

The team opens the season on the road starting at the University of Rhode Island on September 16 and followed by trips to the University of Vermont and Army.

Coach Szlosek sees the Minutemen chances from an academic standpoint.

"Last season a lot of guys had problems on the court because of grades. If the guys keep their heads screwed on and keep their grades up we will be solid."

US Open has first major upset

NEW YORK (AP) — Topseeded Martina Navratilova was denied a shot at the Grand Slam and a $500,000 bonus Tuesday when she was upset by her doubles partner, Pam Shriver, 1-6, 7-6, 6-2 in the quarterfinals of the U.S. Open Tennis Championships.

It was only the second loss this year for Navratilova, who has dominated women's tennis, and stopped a 41-match winning streak.

In another upset, Rodney Harmon surprised eighth-seeded Eliot Teltscher 6-4, 4-6, 6-3, 3-6, 7-6 in a men's fourth round match.

"She had all the pressure on her," the seventh-seeded Shriver said of the Czechoslovakianborn left-hander. "I feel sorry for her, but I'm happy for myself, of course."

Also advancing into the quarterfinals was fourth-seeded Guillermo Vilas, who outlasted hard-serving Steve Denton, the No. 12 seed, 3-6, 4-6, 6-3, 7-6, 6-3.

In a night match, veteran Ilie Nastase of Romania met second seeded Jimmy Connors, with the winner to face Harmon, of Southern Methodist University, the nation's topranked collegiate player this year.

Navratilova won the first set in 17 minutes as she broke the 20 year old Shriver in the fourth and sixth games. Navratilova, who had reached the quarters without losing a set, appeared to be heading for the semifinals when she broke Shriver in the ninth game of the second set for a 5-4 lead.

But Shriver broke back in the 10th game and fought off a break point in the 11th game before holding serve.

After Navratilova held serve to send the second set into a tiebreaker, Shriver lost the first point when she netted a forehand volley, then quickly pulled into a 2-1 lead as Navratilova netted the ball twice.

But Shriver doublefaulted to even the score, then she again took the lead when Navratilova found the net with a forehand volley.

The tiebreaker then went on serve as Shriver won 7-5, tying the match at 1-1.

In the third set, the two held serve until the fifth game, when two unforced errors gave Shriver a 30-0 lead. A forehand down the line made it 40-0 before Navratilova took the next two points.

But Shriver broke her opponent when Navratilova's forehand off a service return sailed long.

The Lutherville, Md., player, who reached the final here in 1978, losing to Chris Evert, before shoulder trouble hampered her the next two years, broke Navratilova again in the seventh game, again at 30, for a 5-2 lead.

Navratilova, who had won the last three Grand Slam tournaments — the Australian and French Opens, and Wimbledon — had a break point, at 40-30, in the eighth game, but a crosscourt backhand was wide, bringing the score to deuce. When she netted a backhand, an unforced error, Shriver had the advantage, and she closed out the match with a forehand volley passing shot.

Cons on the line

PITTSBURGH (AP) — When the Pittsburgh Stealers run with the football, they never go too, too far. They are threetime losers, and long penalties are the reason for their play.

The Pittsburgh Stealers should not to be confused with the professional Pittsburgh Steelers of the National Football League. The Stealers are the football team of Western State Penitentiary.

A member of the Pittsburgh Semi-Pro League, the 45-member inmate team plays a 10- game schedule on Saturday afternoons within the not-so-friendly confines of the Woods Run maximum-security prison on Pittsburgh's north side.

"Yep, no broad jumping, no pole vaulting, no cross-country running, no away games," said Leo Nobile, prison activities director and a Pittsburgh Steelers player in the 1940s.

So far, the Stealers are 0-3. They lost 34-0 Saturday to a visiting team from Penn Hills.

"We really don't care if they win or lose. The important thing is they gain a good personal self-image and achieve personal control," Nobile said.

Student seeks to change law on cohabitation

By PAUL BELVAL
Collegian Staff

A law prohibiting more than four unrelated people living together in an Amherst dwelling may soon be changed if the efforts of a University of Massachusetts student is successful.

Simon-Peter Alciere, a UMass student and Amherst town meeting member, is circulating a petition to place an article on the warrant for October's special town meeting.

The article would ask the town meeting to vote to change the zoning by-law which prohibits more than four unrelated people from living together.

Alciere said the by-law makes little sense. It doesn't allow people who can live together without disturbing anyone else to do so, he said.

"We're trying to present it as a basic civil rights issue," Alciere said. "If people are living together peacefully, why should it be a crime? That's the way it is now."

Alciere said although many landlords know about the by-law, very few adhere to it.

"It's fairly well known, but rarely enforced," he said.

Alciere said a group of people tried to have the by-law changed once before, in 1977, but were unsuccessful.

However, Alciere said he expects to achieve his goal despite other past failures.

"It looks good," he said.

Alciere said he needs 100 signatures by Monday at 4 p.m. Petitions will be posted at the Yellow Sun Food Co-op, the Jones Public Library and the Food for Thought Bookstore.

He said he also hopes to post a copy of the petition in the Off Campus Housing office.

Review of trust funds may OK fee raises

By HANNAH HOSOM
Collegian Staff

Fees at the University of Massachusetts may be raised to cover services presently paid for by the state, depending on the outcome of a review of campus trust funds being conducted by the office of UMass President David C. Knapp.

Services performed by the Physical Plant, such as repairs and maintainance, as well as some salaries and operating costs are presently funded by the state. According to Marie Reid, Director of Operations and Budget, Knapp intends to have the University in compliance with state law.

Dr. Joseph Zannini, Director of Housing Services and a member of the reviewing task force, said Massachusetts General Laws "clearly state indicated trust funds are to pay for the services they (students) receive; they're supposed to be self sufficient."

Zannini said the problem focuses on the determination of what services actually come under the jurisdiction of individual trust funds and which can be considered general services, to be paid for by the University.

Trust funds on campus through which a change in policy affect students are the housing and student activities trust funds. Zannini estimated if housing services presently funded by the state were to be paid by students, housing bills could be raised by "somewhere over $300 per student per year."

According to a memo to Physical Plant Administration from the Director of the Division of Student Activities Randy Donant, the Physical Plant has begun to charge the Student Activities Trust Fund for work done. The memo states discussion between Student Activities, the SGA and the Physical Plant never resulted in final agreements. As a result, Donant states he "cannot, with a clear conscience, authorize payments for these bills until this agreement can be adequately and completely resolved."

Murphy said it is the contention of the SGA that the Student Activities Trust Fund should not have to pay these chargebacks.

"If we open the door to it, they will slowly do a number on trust funds. If we acknowledge this, we will open the door to indirect services such as rent, electricity and heat," Murphy said.

"At housing, we need to pay our fair share, but at the same time provide for lowest cost to students," Zannini said. "And we need some degree of control," he said.

Gnomon workers strike

By KEN LUNDBERG
Collegian Staff

Union employees and volunteers at Gnomon Copy Services yesterday morning began their strike for wage increases and better working conditions by picketing in a tight circle outside the N. Pleasant St. shop.

A spokeswoman for the employees, Mary-Erin Crook said, "No one wants to be here. We'd rather be working but this is the last and only kind of tactic workers can use to put pressure on the management."

Strikers broke their picket circle several times, asking customers to bring their business to Amherst Copy Center, another copying center only blocks away. Only one woman said she would go there.

Crook and other workers of the United Electrical Union local 264 have for the past year been trying to negotiate a 2½ percent wage increase (10 cents per hours) and provision to install an air ventilation system.

"At this point, making up for wages we lost last year is going to be impossible. We want good faith negotiations," Crook said.

"We'll make an offer and they'll make an offer, saying that's their final offer," she said.

Crook said employees' efforts in a week-long boycott last November — an outgrowth of the same contractual disagreements — decreased business by 80 percent.

"They (the management) claim they don't know about the negotiations or understand them and I don't believe that," Crook said.

Roland Whetherbee, who with his wife bought the Gnomon franchise in Amherst not long ago, denied misunderstanding the negotiations between the Cambridge-based corporation and United Electrical.

"We understand the negotiations," Whetherbee said. "But because we just bought the store, we need more time to get our act together."

Whetherbee also said an earlier negotiation deadline had to be broken because he was talking care of family matters surrounding the death of his father. And because a urtion representative had to attend a conference recently, Whetherbee said he was unable to meet the

One hostage freed, stalemate continues at Polish embassy

By CAROLYN LESH
Associated Press

BERN, Switzerland — While authorities negotiated yesterday with terrorists threatening to blow up the Polish Embassy, police spirited a diplomat out of an attic hideout where he had been eluding the armed raiders for two days, official said.

The mission's military attache and four other staff members remained prisoners of the Polish anti-communist terrorists, who are threatening to kill themselves and their hostages at 10 a.m. Friday (4 a.m EDT) unless martial law is lifted in Poland and all political prisoners are freed.

A government communique said Jozef Matusiak, an embassy attache whose wife was one of eight previously released captives, was "freed" by police officers, but did not say how.

Sources said members of the security forces surrounding the building had put a metal ladder up to the attic window Tuesday in a rescue attempt that later was abandoned, and there was speculation that this method was used to rescue Matusiak.

Reporters were being kept 200 yards from the police-ringed embassy.

The communique said Matusiak was the "mystery man" in a widely published press photograph showing someone holding a white paper out of the attic window and gesturing to police hiding in the embassy garden below.

It said Matusiak was in his third-story apartment when the anti-communist terrorists burst into the embassy Monday and seized 12 hostages.

Military attache Col. Zygmunt Drobuszewski also had hidden from the terrorists, but was found and captured Tuesday and remains a hostage along with four junior staff members.

Bargaining over the telephone and in one face-to-face meeting, police won release of three prisoners Tuesday and five more on yesterday.

They also gained a two-day extension in the raiders' deadline, originally set for 10 a.m. yesterday. The terrorists claim to have 55 pounds of dynamite.

Authorities believe four armed terrorists stormed the Polish Embassy Monday and took the original 12 hostages — nine embassy workers, two of their wives and a young Polish student who was visiting the mission at the time.

By yesterday morning, the armed gunmen had released a pregnant employee and five other women, the student and an older male staff member suffering from high blood pressure.

The Polish news agency PAP said in Warsaw that the remaining hostages were Dobruszewski, Jerzy Rojek, Stefan Piowar, Czeslaw Mroczek and Czeslaw Antoniewicz.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Tadeusz Kochorewicz said in Warsaw that freed hostages reported the terrorists tormented their captives by "simulating shooting and putting firearms to their backs," and that the band of raiders have "anti-tank projectiles, gas masks and are heavily armed."

The terrorists' leader, who calls himself Col. Wysocki, has claimed the raiders are armed with "heavy machine guns."

Officer pleads innocent

BOSTON — A military police officer indicted in a bloody motel brawl that resulted in one man's death pleaded innocent Wednesday at arraignment in Suffolk Superior Court.

Charles A. Dimino, identified by the district attorney's office as the son of the motel manager, entered the plea to a charge of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon.

He was released in $100 personal recognizance pending a pretrial hearing Sept. 17.

Dimino, who appeared in court wearing his Army uniform, said he had been suspended from his duties as a military police officer.

Dimino said he was disappointed by being indicted.

Ten police officers and three civilians earlier entered innocent pleas to various charges in the brawl at King Arthur's Motel and Lounge in the Chelsea produce district July 23.

One lounge customer, Vincent Joseph Bordonaro, 54, of Everett, died several days later of head injuries.

Witnesses said police from Chelsea and adjacent Everett raided a party in the motel and beat civilians with night sticks and clubs allegedly to even the score from an earlier barroom fight involving an off-duty police officer.

Reagen pushes bill

WASHINGTON — President Reagan announced yesterday he will play a direct role in the abortion debate now heading toward resolution in the Senate.

"It is time to stand and be counted on this issue," Reagan said in a letter to senators holding key votes in the abortion fight.

Until now, Reagan had spoken out in favor of proposed changes to the current national policy of legalized abortions but made no specific efforts to push legislation on the subject through the Congress.

Critics said Reagan was responding to attacks from New Right conservatives who want the president to make social issues such as abortion and school prayer a high priority.

"My personal view is he, Reagan, doesn't have his heart in it," said Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., one of those opposing pending anti-abortion legislation. "It is a token appeasement of the right wing."

In a second letter to Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., the president said he would fight to overcome a filibuster organized by liberals who want to block enactment of anti-abortion legislation proposed by conservative Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C.

"I am expending my efforts to support" the attempt to shut off the debate as well as the Helms proposal, Reagan said.

The lines go on.....

Long lines await students buying textbooks

By TIM MACPHEE
Collegian Correspondent

Students still needing books will find shorter lines in the Textbook Annex during suppertime and in the early morning, according to Dean Scudder, Assistant store manager.

"I came at eleven this morning and bought all my books except for one subject," said sophomore Karen O'Brien

In the afternoon, however, students are finding long and tedious lines.

"I walked in here, took one look, and turned around. The lines are too long and it's too hot," said Steve Gregory, a freshman Stockbridge major.

The manager of the Textbook Annex, Russell Evans, said things are running smoothly and students seem exceptionally calm at this time.

"The students have learned the system and the lines haven't been too bad," he said.

In addition to lengthy afternoon lines, students are faced with the problem of textbooks arriving late.

"We are several hundred orders behind due to late orders by professors," Evans said.

"The late orders are a small percentage, considering number of orders that have been processed," said Ellen Aldrich, administrative assistant.

"Generally, students leaving the bookstore have mixed reactions.

Junior Tom Martin waited in line for "about 10 minutes," but admitted "There's not much you can do about it."

The Textbook Annex will be open until nine tonight. Hours for Friday are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Saturday.

Students buying books at the Textbook Annex yesterday began battling the back-to-school crowds.

Hardcore UM Outing Club offers open-air experience

By JILL OKUN
Collegian Correspondent

Whether it's climbing volcanic mountains in Mexico or canoeing down a quiet stream in the New England area, the University of Massachusetts Outing Club offers a variety of activities for students interested in the outdoors.

The Outing Club is designed to get students and faculty members to experience various aspects of the outdoor life, president of the club Wes Miller said.

Sporting activities include caving, hiking, canoeing, rock climbing, hard core mountaineering and cross country skiing from the novice to expert levels, he said.

A yearly fee of $5 is used for equipment. The price of trips vary according to their length and the payments made for those trips fund such costs as gas and the expense of an average day trip should not exceed $5. The maximum weekend rate is $25.

The Outing Club has a cabin in Bethlehem, New Hampshire, on the west side of the White Mountain National Forest, which is surrounded by excellent ski areas, Miller said.

The cabin is used year round and can be rented anytime, though it must be signed up for in advance because it fills up quickly, he said.

The price of the cabin is determined by the length of the stay. Members are given a discount, he said.

Last year's spring break brought the outing club to West Virginia for ten days of white water canoeing and caving, at a cost of $90 per person. Currently, members are planning a trip in January to climb volcanoes in Mexico. Miller said suggestions for trips are encouraged at the meetings.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Add-drop chaos for fun and profit

She approached me out of nowhere and asked me if I knew a fast way to get her into BA210. Before I could get out a first syllable, she had produced three twenties and was waving them under my nose. "Your place in line or your add-drop form for instant wealth," she whispered loud enough for the entire line to hear. I had just been exposed to the newest phenomenon in add-drop, "course scalping."

Students with similar academic and financial pursuits had emerged as a new form of registration hurdle. They appeared in small groups inconspicuously stationed outside of most of the academic buildings hawking their wares.

"Latest updated wait list for COINS 121 for five bucks a look," said one. His business partner had just emerged from a five hour bargaining session in CASIAC. He had managed to obtain three more openings in Econ 103 which he could sell at fifty a shot. The discussion section was an extra ten dollars option.

While the more naive of my classmates weaved their way through the bowels of Bartlett trying to pry their way into Spanish, I had purchased a dance class from a fast talking scalper for my dorm furniture, a TOC sticker and a twenty. Not bad, considering I had been trying to get a dance class since I was a frosh.

Meanwhile in the Textbook Annex, a sophomore was vainly trying to sell her Brockton High school yearbook. Her motive was to scrape enough cash together to buy her way into a racketball class, or at least move her name up a few pages on the waiting list. Simultaneously, the physical education department had announced that the wait list for volleyball would be published in hard cover and would be available within the month (list price $23.99 in the Annex).

Members of the ski team tried to convince the Bursar that they should be give E core credit for their time on the slopes. One confused teller wasn't aware of the new trends in registration. Her education on the subject was updated as she slipped a roll of tens into her purse and started filling out the necessary forms. Ski team: one. Academic Integrity: zero.

The dorms were not without their piece of the action. Security was tightened as a small ring of students and a CRA on the second floor of Gorman did a brisk business in bootleg add-drop and overload forms. I had taken mine to the fashion marketing department and found the end of the line. I noticed a calm ten year old in front of me. She was armed with her mother's Master Charge and a note which demanded that she be admitted into the textiles course. I didn't anticipate that she would encounter any problems. After all, the office was also accepting VISA and American Express.

In response to this chaos, a new RSO group had formed in charge of academic stockbrokerage and financila advising. They advise students on their potential academic portfolios and suggest the most profitable way to buy into a course, for a small fee and a promisary note for ten percent of one's lifetime earnings. Oh, the catch, there's a waitlist for appointments.

A governor for the 80's

In the interest of public awareness and in view of the upcoming fall elections, the "Collegian" has decided to reprint this article from "The Boston World," The piece originally appeared September 1, 1982.

Some pollsters feel that the 1982 gubernatorial campaign has produced more public apathy than any other election in Massachusetts history. We at Boston World feel that people are not apathetic, but vehement in their convictions. Unfortunately, their vehemence is directed, not towards who they are voting for, but towards whom they are voting against.

A Pittsfield man recently told ABC news that he was very upset at the prospect of Governor King vetoing the legislative pay increase. "If that happens", he exclaimed, "I will have to re-evaluate the candidates to see who I am voting against."

Dave McCarthy

After Mike Dukakis promised to support public higher education, a woman in Lincoln said that she would have to re-read her past tax statements to reaffirm her anti-Duke stance.

So what is the alternative? Boston World thinks that the voters must be persuaded to vote for a candidate, not against one. So we embarked on the task of finding a candidate everyone could agree upon. It was not easy. Most of the Democrats are under indictment, and any major Republican vote-getter has already been bought off by John Lakian.

Because of this we got a listing of all college political science majors in the Bay State, because only they would be dumb enough to want the job. We randomly pulled a name out of a hat and came up with David McCarthy from UMass.

Here are excerpts from the interview we had with him.

BW – "Mr. McCarthy, did you know that you have been picked as Boston World's gubernatorial candidate for 1982?"

McCarthy – "You know, I've always thought I'd make a good governor. Although I've never lusted in my heart, I have lusted in various other places."

BW – "What will be your strategy to get elected?"

McCarthy – "First of all, I will make sure I'm not invited to any of the debates with the other candidates. Debates only give people ammunition which they can use to vote against you.

Second of all, I have noticed that all of the candidates have a major issue. Governor King's issue is crime. Mike Dukakis's issue is integrity. John Sears' issue is the state budget. The problem with those issues is that they're too controversial. So I'm picking issues that everyone can agree upon. For example toxic waste!"

BW – "Toxic waste?"

McCarthy – "You ever met anyone that's for it; I sure haven't."

BW – "What about declining domestic car sales which is forcing the closing of a GM plant in Framingham?"

McCarthy – "Actually, the problem is psychological. People feel that anything made in a foreign country is better than the comaparable item made in the U.S. So my solution is to change the name of the 'big three' auto makers so they sound foreign. We could turn General Motors into Moteur des Generale, Ford into Fjord, and Chrysler into Chrysleratti."

So there you have it. Boston World's candidate for 1982. Someone with no stands, no opinions, and no backbone. A man you cannot possibly vote against.

Dave McCarthy is, when not on the campaign trail, a Collegian columnist.

What you need to tackle the higher mathematics of a science or engineering curriculum are more functions—more functions than a simple slide-rule calculator has.

Enter the TI-55-II, with 112 powerful functions. You can work faster and more accurately with the TI-55-II, because it's preprogrammed to perform complex calculations—like definite integrals, linear regression and hyperbolics—at the touch of a button. Black Affairs

Black Affairs greets students

By PHIL JENNINGS
Collegian Staff

Black Affairs welcomes the Freshman class, transfer students and all returning students to the new school year. The Black Affairs Department of the Collegian presents the news, information and political education necessary for students of color here, which ordinarily might not be covered at a predominantly white university. We are your voice when it seems as though you cannot be heard.

There are several Third World RSO organizations which you can become a part of. These groups will help you to gain practical experience in your area of interest. Black Mass Communications Project, Nummo News, SCERA, Afrik-Am, Ahora, Third World Theatre Series and Duke Ellington Committee just to name a few. These organizations desperately need your support in order to bring quality art, news, music and information to your campus. Without your support a minority presence on this campus would be non-existant.

We cannot stress the importance of a unified community. Get to know your classmates. Study together and do not let females walk alone at night. Remember if you don't look out for yourselves and your interests, no one will.

We here at Black Affairs welcome you and wish you academic success, and for your convenience have listed some do's and dont's to keep in mind.

Do: accompany females at night, become familiar with academic support systems (CCEBMS, BCP, ASA), support Third World groups, get to know your fellow classmates, and ask questions when you have doubt.

Don't: walk along at night, don't study in noisy areas, don't vandalize university property, respect your neighbors property, and don't be afraid to ask questions.

An Officer and a Gentleman an old-fashioned love story

By ANDREA MILLSTEIN
Collegian Staff

An Officer and a Gentleman , directed by Taylor Hackford, (who made the wonderful The Idolmaker), is the heartwarming story of Zack Mayo (Richard Gere) who, after realizing that he is leading a dead-end life in the Phillipines following in the footsteps of his drunken sailor father, enlists in a racking 13 week training course at the Naval Aviation Officer Candidate School in Port Rainier, Washington. His motives are two-fold; he dreams of a glamorous career as a jet pilot and he desperately wants to prove to himself that he can make more of his life than that of his father.

At the training camp, Zack's determination and valor is both tested and strengthened by the sergeant in command played by Lou Gossett. The story then focuses on the conflicts and the conquests between Zack and the demanding sergeant.

Zack's romantic character begins to develop as soon as he meets Paula, a factory worker in a paper mill company, who dreams of being "carried off into the sunset" by a gallant aviator. The fluctutations in their relationship are symbolic to the strengths and weaknesses of their individual characters and in the roles they take on.

Taylor Hackford has created a 1982 movie reminiscent of the love stories of yesteryear. He has combined the elements of love and courage and laced them with humor and sensitivity to create a love story between two people searching for their dreams.

The casting is well accomplished. Acclaimed actor, Richard Gere plays the tough yet compassionate hero who is determined to reach his goals. Debra Winger (Urban Cowboy, Cannery Row) masters the role of the only woman Zack has ever loved, and Lou Gosset skillfully carries out the responsibilities of the sergeant, Zack's enemy and inspiration.

Although some aspects of this film may seem a bit "fairy taleish", An Officer and a Gentleman is a good old fashioned love story that touches the hearts of the audience.

Debra Winger, shown here as Suzy in Cannery Row, plays Paula, a local woman, in An Officer and a Gentleman.

The University Gallery opens its fall exhibition season with a striking series of lithographs, etchings, aquacuts, woodcuts and linocuts entitled Contemporary Prints: The Figure Beside Itself. The exhibition runs from September 18 through the 7th of November and includes a diversa variety of prints by major artists from California, Chicago, New York and Europe.

According to the University Gallery, the major thema of the exhibition is that of modern anxiety, specifically the anxious state of the individual in contemporary society. Prints by artists Richard Bosman, Enzo Cucchi and George Baselitz will ba on view as wsll as recent prints by Francis Bacon, Jim Nutt, and William T. Wiley.

The University Gallary is located on the campus pond of the FAC and is open Tuesday through Friday 11 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and Saturday and Sunday 2 p.m. to 5 p.m.

Reminder: there will be an important arts department recruitment meeting tonight in the Collegian newsroom — 113 Campus Center — at 7:30. If you are interested in writing for the Arts page please stop by. All are welcome!

"Suicide Mode D'Emploi": A form for suicide

By CAROLYN LESH
Associated Press

PARIS — On a midsummer's night in the Loire Valley town of Tours, 27 year old Patrick Bondy killed himself by swallowing barbiturates. Near his body lay a how-to-commit-suicide manual that has become the most controversial book in France this year.

Bondy, a former department store worker, had been depressed and out of work for nine months.

"The authors are criminals," Marcel Bondy said after his son's death. "This horror must be withdrawn from publication."

He has joined psychiatrists, politicians, religious leaders, suicide prevention centers and othes who want the bestseller withdrawn.

Based on the belief that suicide should be painless, the 276 page bok entitled "Suicide Mode D'Emploi" (Suicide Operating Instructions) contains 50 recipes for lethal "cocktails" that guarantee a "gentle" death.

"This book is bad for depressed people with suicidal fantasies who are seeking help," said psychiatrist Jean Pierre Soubrier, whose 60 publications on suicide have earned him the name "Monsieur Suicide" in France. "Nine out of 10 people who try to kill themselves don't want to succeed."

French Minister of Health Jack Ralite has urged the book to be banned. So have the nation's largest medical, pharmaceutical and consumer groups.

The Roman Catholic Church has condemned the book as have suicide prevention centers and a French organization of people who have survived attempts to kill themselves.

"Suicide" was published in April has sold 50,000 copies in five months and has been on the French non-fiction bestseller lists for the past two months. It is scheduled to be published in West Germany and Spain this fall. Publishing houses in the United States, Japan, Italy, Brazil and Denmark are negotiating for the rights.

Its 10 chapters take up such topics as suicide and insurance, the right to choose death, the history of suicide, the alternatives to suicides and where and how to commit suicide.

Claude Guillon and Yves Le Bonniec, the Paris based journalists who wrote the book, refuse all requests for interviews. They say that everything they have to say about suicide is in the book.

"I expect this book to make about $210,000 this year and about $360,000 in the next five years," says its publisher, Alain Moreau.

He says about 10 suicides have been linked to the book.

"I feel remorse," Moreau said during an interview. "This is a book that pleads for life. But it also recognizes that the right of suicide is an inalienable right, like the right to work, the right to like certain things, the right to publish. What use is a right without the means to execute it?"

Moreau said he has received about 500 letters about the book.

"In all my 20 years in publishing, I've neer had such a response from the public," said the 45-year-old Moreau. "The bulk of letters are from elderly people who want to know where they can buy the book."

Most book stores in Paris stock "Suicide." But a number of stores, especially in smally towns, have refused to sell it.

Several French newspapers, magazines and radio stations have refused to carry advertisements for the book.

The Ministry of Health says about 75,000 people try to commit suicide in France each year. About 10,000 succeed. No statistics yet indicate if that number has increased since the publication of "Suicide."

Parisian skims one of France's best selling and most controversial books that instructs readers how to commit suicide by drinking deadly "cocktails". Entitled "Suicide Operating Instructions", the book has given rise to a wave of protest after being linked to several suicides.

Exit, a British euthanasia society, began distributing copies of its pamphlet "Guide to Self-Deliverance" a year ago, but the how-to-kill-yourself manual is available only on request from Exit members of three months' standing and over the age of 25.

The Exit pamphlet lists four bloodless methods of committing suicide by using nonprescription drugs. It was held up for more than a year because Exit feared prosecution under a 1961 British law that carries a maximum 14-year jail sentence for those convicted of aiding a suicide. In the United States, most states have similar laws.

British Attorney General Sir Michael Havers has sought a high court ruling to declare Exit's sales of the pamphlet illegal. A hearing is due in the fall.

Hey kid,why not row?

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

"Joe, go grab that kid coming out of the SUB," head crew coach Dave Kumlin told one of his team's captains yesterday, "He looks like rowing potential."

Unlike the football, basketball and other varsity sports on the campus of the University of Massachusetts, the UMass crew team does not actively recruit players from high school to participate on their squad.

What results instead is a campuswide search during the first few days of school for athletically inclined individuals, both men and women, to make up the respective novice teams.

"You don't have to have rowing experience to make the team," said Kumlin, "In fact, most of the people we got have never rowed before. They were football, basketball and baseball players who were looking for something different to challenge them."

According to Kumlin, crew is extremely demanding and the people who participate have to be athletic and dedicated.

"I've never had to cut anybody because people who aren't willing to put in the necessary time and effort usually just fade away during the year," said Kumlin.

Height is also a major factor in crew. This is because the taller the person, the longer his or her stroke can be. The longer a stroke, the longer the blade can pull through the water and propel the boat forward.

Crew does not discriminate against shorter people, Kumlin pointed out.

"We're also looking for small aggressive, intelligent people that weigh between 115 and 125 pounds for coxswains," Kumlin said.

Coxswains are the eyes of a crew. The oarsmen face from the bow (the front of the boat) toward the stern (the back) and are unable to see. The coxswain is responsible for steering a straight course and keeping all the oarsmen in synchronization.

Historically, the UMass crews have been extremely successful on a local and national level. Various boats have captured New England championship titles and the men's varsity eight won the Dad Vail Regatta (the division two national championship) in 1980.

"It is a very competitive program that has a winning tradition," Kumlin said.

So, if you are of reasonable size, are in reasonable shape and are walking out of the SUB sometime today, don't be surprised if you are suddenly pulled out of the mainstream line of students going to classes and are "recruited."

"We need the bodies," said Kumlin, "hard working, dedicated people. We'll teach them everything they need to know about rowing if they're willing to learn."

NFL owners don't want a strike ,offer a deal

WASHINGTON (AP) — National Football League owners, trying to avert a threatened players' strike, offered a scaled bonus system Wednesday that would give players up to $60,000 this year on top of their individually negotiated salaries.

The owners' plan would give each player $10,000 in bonus money for each year of service in the NFL, retroactive to 1977 and continuing through 1986. The total possible bonus would be $100,000 over 10 years.

Jack Donlan, executive director of the NFL Management Council and the owners' chief negotiator, called the offer "a colossal amount of money."

The plan does not, however, meet the players' main demand for a fixed 55 percent of each team's gross revenue and in effect adds only $10,000 a year more the next four seasons to the pay proposal rejected outright by the NFL Players Association in July. Those proposed salary levels were less than half what the union is seeking.

"Under no circumstances will we include a fixed percentage of the gross," Donlan said.

Ed Garvey, executive director of the NFLPA, did not attend Wednesday's 90-minute negotiating session and there was no immediate response from the union.

The bonus money, labled career adjustment pay by the owners, would cover a player whether he is listed on the active, inactive, injured reserve or physically unable to perform lists.

A veteran player entering his sixth year in the league would receive a $60,000 bonus. A rookie, carried on an NFL roster for the first time this fall, would receive $10,000.

All bonuses would be payable within 15 days of the signing of a new collective bargaining agreement.

The owners' newest proposal also revises the league's first refusal-compensation system governing the signing of free agents.

Players have said the current system, calling for a team signing a free agent to compensate the player's former team with high draft choices, has effectively discouraged the signing of free agents, restricting a player's movement from one team to another.

Under the plan offered Wednesday, a veteran entering his fourth year in the league and offered $89,000 by a new team could be signed without compensation to his former team. Currently, a No. 1 draft pick would be required as compensation.

Van Eeghen to Pats

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — The New England Patriots made what Coach Ron Meyer called "a significant move" Wednesday by signing fullback Mark van Eeghen, the career rushing leader of the Oakland Raiders.

The Raiders, now based in Los Angeles, waived the 30-year-old van Eeghen Moday as part of their final National Football League training camp cuts.

In eight years with the Raiders, he rushed 1,475 times for 5,907 yards and 35 touchdowns.

To make room on the roster, the Patriots waived fullback Don Calhoun, their third-leading career rusher in seven seasons with the club.

With Calhoun's departure, the Patriots' active roster is now missing 19 of the 45 players who were on it at the end of last year's 2-14 season.

Meanwhile, the revolving door continued to spin around New England place kickers as the team announced the signing of free agent Rex Robinson and the waiving of Dave Jacobs.

Robinson was claimed on waivers from Miami, which had picked him up Aug. 10 after Denver released him. He was drafted last year by Cincinnati out of Georgia but did not make the Bengals.

Jacobs joined the Patriots Aug. 31 after being cut by Philadelphia. He made both field goals and all five extra point kicks in last Saturday's 41-27 preseason victory over the Green Bay Packers.

He appeared to have won a spot with the Patriots when they placed veteran John Smith on the injured reserve list Monday because of a setback in his recovery from surgery on his non-kicking leg.

Meyer said van Eeghen, who was born in Cambridge, Mass., and raised in Cranston, R.I., is a "bigger back, better blocker...better pass receiver" than the 30-year-old Calhoun.

Ruggers ready

By Scot Cooper
Collegian Correspondent

The defending New England College rugby champions, the University of Massachusetts, open their Fall 1982 season at home against Norwich University this Saturday at 1 p.m. at the Lower Boyden fields.

Player-coach Glenn Conway is counting on his aggressive forwards and quick backfield to keep UMass railroading to the top.

Returnees L. Scott Cohen, Stevie Foohey, Joe Kennedy, Boris Kenneen, Pear Cooper, Dave Brown, Bob Clark, Greg Tawa, and Duncan McKay are all expected to help pave the road to another winning season. New England Rugby All-Stars Mike DeCampo, Kevin Lyons, and George Economou are also back.

The object of rugby is to score more points than the other group, or side as teams are called, in the two 40 minute halves. Points are awarded for a try, worth four points, which is similar to a touchdown. The ball must be touched to the ground in the end zone in order to get the four points. After the try, the ball is taken out and an attempt is made to kick the ball through the uprights. If the kick is successful, you recieve two points for a total of six. Penalty kicks, following an infraction, are worth three points.

The team's fall 1982 schedule is as follows;

September	11	Norwich University	at home
September	18	Holy Cross	away
September	25	Rensselaer poly-tech	home
		Massachusetts Maritime	at home

Altercation at Gnomon Copy strike scene

By JOHN BROBST
Collegian Staff

A fracas erupted yesterday morning between striking employees of the Gnomon Copy Services on North Pleasant Street and an emplyee of Gnomon Inc., injuring a striking employee.

Tobi Saisa of Amherst sustained an injury to the head after he was allegedly attacked by Anthony Wright of New Hampshire, a serviceman for Gnomon Inc., according to Dale Nielsen, a picketing employee who witnessed the fracas.

Wright walked out of the Gnomon offices swearing at the picketers, Nielsen said. Wright then knocked Saisa's picket sign out of his hands, broke it in half and tackled him, injuring his head, Nielsen said.

Wright waved the broken sign at the picketers while threatening them, Nielsen said.

"The guy's insane! He should be locked up," Nielsen said.

Saisa was not seriously injured, but planned on filing charges of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon against Wright, Nielsen said.

"Wright was sent to the hardware store to get parts for a copying machine," according to Gnomon owner Roland Whetherbee "The picketers started yelling and swearing at him, calling him a scab."

"They started shoving him around, and Anthony pushed them out of the way," Whetherbee said.

Wright was not a scab, but an employee of Gnomon Inc. who was there to fix a copying machine, Whetherbee said.

"Four picketers jumped on him and he wasn't even there an hour," Whetherbee said.

No arrests were made by local police since they were not at the incident, according to Lt. Dave Jankowski of the Amherst Police Department.

Police received conflicting stories about the incident, Jankowski said. He predicted Saisa would ask for a show cause hearing.

United Electrical Workers Union Local 264 began their strike for wage increases and better working conditions by picketing in a tight circle outside the North Pleasant Street shop on Wednesday morning.

"Fifty percent of the picketers never worked at this store," Whetherbee said.

COINS dep't. receives Digital Corp. grant

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Correspondent

The Computer and Information Science (COINS) department has received the largest single equipment grant in University of Massachusetts history.

The grant, totalling approximately $900,000, was made by the Digital Equipment Corporation of Maynard, Mass.

UMass researchers will use the grant to develop an office computer that can think for itself.

Included in the grant are ten VAX 11/750 computers, as well as related equipment and special software.

The equipment will be used in an effort to develop a prototype "intelligent office system," said Professor W. Bruce Croft, who is coordinating the project with Prof. Victor Lesser.

"Our aim is not to replace people, but to assist them," said Croft.

The ten Digital computers will be used as personal computers to develop a sort of "intelligent assistant" for office work.

Croft said that private industry has been increasing grant support to universities because of the decline in federal and state funding for equipment needed to do research.

"It's different because it's an industrial grant," he said. "Usually we get grants from the National Science Foundation (NSF) and the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (DARPA).

In addition to the $900,000 DEC grant, approximately $350,000 in NSF and DARPA grants will be spent on related Digital equipment, according to UMass Provost Loren Baritz.

Croft explained that the grant has no real strings attached. Digital personnel will offer assistance, and he said that Digital will be updated about the project, but they will not have any special rights to the research findings.

"Industrial grants usually have very specific goals," said Croft. This grant is not restrictive and will allow continuation of work already partially in progress.

Part of the project will involve an information retrieval system, which will allow the computer user to simply ask for all documents on a particular subject, just as a secretary might now search through file cabinets.

The computer will use a statistically-based method to search through the documents it has on record and will produce the relevant ones.

UMass proposes educational telecommunications network

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

A bill to establish a state-wide educational telecommunications network, initiated by the University of Massachusetts and co-sponsored by Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst, and Rep. Jim Collins, D-Amherst, is now progressing towards passage in the State House.

The network, connected by microwave towers, would link public and private colleges, schools, businesses, hospitals and homes. It would also broadcast university courses and lectures into homes and offices, inter-connect state college and university systems, connect local cable neworks, and provide the Commonwealth with a modern communications system, Olver said.

The Massachusetts Commission on Telecommunications, established by UMass, recommended establishing the network to "provide a cost-effective means of delivering an almost limitless variety of programs and information;...(and) contribute substantially to the Massachusetts economy," according to its report.

The bill was approved in June by the legislature's Joint Committee on Education, of which Collins is vice-chairman, then passed the Senate without opposition. Collins predicted the House would also pass the legislation when it reconvenes later this month and said he expects the Governor will then sign it into law.

"With the network, a professor in one part of the state could instruct employees at a high-technology firm located miles away from the campus and interact with his class," Olver said. "All faculty could enrich their classes with guest lecturers."

Collins, however, said the project would mean not only increased educational opportunities, but would also serve as a multi-purpose communications network essential to a high-technology state such as Massachusetts. He said the project's diversity is evidenced by the composition of both the telecommunications commission and the proposed corporation which the bill specifies would operate the network, a publicly and privately based representation of scientific, cultural, industrial and educational fields.

Around $10 million would need to be appropriated in next year's state budget to initiate the project, Collins said, but the network would charge for its services, eventually making it self-supporting. Collins said a detailed structure for the network had not yet been established which would indicate what reimbursement UMass would receive for the many educational programs it is expected to produce.

Massachusetts is one of only six states in the country without an educational telecommunications system, Olver said, while states including California, Pennsylvania and Texas have had considerable experience with educational

King files capital punishment bill in time for Tuesday gubernatorial primary

BOSTON (AP) – Gov. Edward J. King filed a bill yesterday to restore the death penalty in Massachusetts, acknowledging that his timing was intended to make capital punishment an issue in Tuesday's Democratic primary.

"I believe a majority of our people do support capital punishment, as I do," King said at a news conference, adding, "I believe the issue has been ducked" by his primary opponent, former Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

Dukakis, asked for comment at another news conference, described King's bill as "just last minute political stuff." He said he hadn't "the slightest idea" what the bill says or what he would do with it if he were governor.

Gerald FitzGerald, Dukakis' press spokesman, said later that Dukakis remains opposed to capital punishment, but "he is not going to lock himself into a position" on a specific bill.

"My question is, (would) he sign the bill or (would) he veto it?" King said to reporters after responding, "yes, absolutely," when asked whether the timing was intended to "flush him (Dukakis) out."

Previous death penalty statutes have been found by the Massachusetts Supreme Court to violate the state constitution.

A proposed constitutional change permitting capital punishment has passed the Legislature and is on the November election ballot for ratification, or rejection, by the voters. If voters approve, the Legislature and the governor still would have to approve a specific statute, such as the one King filed yesterday, in order to get the death penalty back on the books.

Even if King loses the primary, the Legislature could pass the bill and he could sign it before leaving office in January.

Dukakis, King's predecessor in the governor's office, vetoed death penalty legislation in 1977.

Board of Bar overseers recommends no action be taken against attorney

BOSTON (AP) – Responding to a complaint by U.S. District Judge Joseph L. Tauro, the state Board of Bar Overseers has recommended that no disciplinary action be taken against the former assistant U.S. attorney who prosecuted ex-state Sen. James A. Kelly, it was announced yesterday.

In a letter to Judge Andrew A. Caffrey, chief U.S. district judge for Massachusetts, the board said former prosecutor D. Lloyd MacDonald did not violate the standards for professional conduct, and he did not knowingly allow false testimony.

Tauro also issued a memorandum yesterday that said, in part, "The essential basis for the board's recommendation was its determination that MacDonald did not intentionally violate his legal and ethical responsibilities in his prosecution of the defendant Kelly." Tauro said he "accepts (the) recommendation that no further disciplinary proceedings be initiated against MacDonald."

MacDonald, who currently is running for Suffolk County district attorney, prosecuted the former Senate ways and means chairman in a 1981 trial that ended with the jury deadlocked 11-1 in favor of conviction. A mistrial was declared.

Kelly was charged with taking $34,500 from a now-defunct Worcester architectural firm in exchange for using his influence in government to aid the company.

On July 26, Tauro issued an opinion denying Kelly's motion to dismiss the case, despite what the judge said was "demonstrated prosecutorial misconduct" in the handling of trial witnesses.

Tauro's 23-page decision centered on the credibility of two of MacDonald's witnesses, including William Masiello, an owner of the architectural firm. The judge said the prosecutor was legally bound to tell the court if any witness was giving false testimony.

"MacDonald was either ignorant of, or chose to ignore, the clear mandates of his legal and ethical responsibilities," Tauro said in his decision. "Instead, he devised and applied his own code of conduct and remained silent about Masiello's false testimony."

Students jam financial aid office

By GARY STARTA
Collegian Staff

Students getting Help Loans and paying bills have kept the Financial Aid Office in Whitmore Administration Building busy during the past few days.

Art Jackson, director of Financial Aid at the University of Massachusetts, said a tight economic year and cutbacks in federal aid have caused many of the problems at the office.

Jackson said a larger percentage of students are paying their bills when they arrive at school because they don't have the money until then.

Students are also re-applying for Help Loans because new regulations have come into effect last October.

Students also come to the Financial Aid Office to return bank loan checks, register for work study or just ask questions, Jackson said.

Jackson said between 300 and 400 students come to the office each day.

Better coordination between the Financial Aid Office, Housing Services and the Bursar's Office have resolved most problems, despite cutbacks in federal aid, Jackson said.

Help Loans and Pell Grants are available for undergraduate students for educational expenses. Loans must be certified by the Financial Aid Office.

Pell Grants are given to students determined to be financially needy, with additional money awarded to the most needy.

Professor has newest work published

By HANNAH HOSOM
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts history professor has written what Harper and Row Publishing Company calls the "first major biography of Martin Luther King Jr."

Dr. Stephen B. Oates, professor of history and an adjunct professor of English at the University has had his fourth major biography, Let the Trumpet Sound: The Life of Martin Luther King, published on the 19th anniversary of King's famous "I have a dream" speech.

Oates writes, "Political analysts almost unanimously attributed the 1965 voting act to King's Selma (Alabama) campaign. Without pressure from there, it would have taken years to extract such legislation from Congress."

Oates took over five years to finish the King biography, traveling across the South, speaking with people involved with the King crusade for human rights, and "retracing the course of King's civil rights campaigns," according to Harper and Row.

He received a Senior Summer Fellowship Grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities to work on the book, which the publisher has announced is a Literary Guild Alternate.

Oates has written three biographies, all receiving critical acclamation, on Nat Turner, John Brown, and Abraham Lincoln. The last was made possible by a grant from the Guggenheim Foundation, and received the Christopher Award for Outstanding Literature, stated Harper and Row.

In addition to his teaching responsibilities at UMass, Oates lectures across the nation on his works as well as on biography writing techniques.

No assistants hired for new living areas

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

There are still no assistant housing directors for the new residential area set-up at the University of Massachusetts because the candidates interviewed over the summer were not qualified for the job, according to Dr. Joseph Zannini, director of Housing Services.

Housing Services decided last year to divide on-campus housing into an east and a west area. The east area is comprised of Northeast, Sylvan, Central and Orchard Hill. The west area includes Southwest Residential College.

Zannini said 10 candidates were interviewed at a total cost to the University of $3,582 for meals, travel and lodging.

"We didn't really feel satisfied with the total pool," he said. "We wanted to get the best possible people that we could for UMass."

The positions should be filled by the 1983 spring semester, he said.

Housing is now in the process of getting official permission to re-advertise for the positions. Zannini said the advertising will be on a national scale including such publications as the "Chronicle of Higher Education." There will also be some word of mouth advertising as well, he said.

"We use contacts at other institutions primarily to recruit using affirmative action. We're looking for individuals who have a good breadth of experience dealing with the academic community," he said, adding that candidates should be able to effectively deal with student issues and student groups.

Zannini said the housing system at UMass is the sixth largest in the country and requires more intensified organization than it had previously.

Assistant housing directors are responsible for supervision of the residential and educational staff including Community Resource Assistants, Resident Assistants and Heads of Residence. The assistant directors would make sure their staff is well trained and perform their responsibilities well. These responsibilities include social issues awareness and carrying out discipline, Zannini said.

Zannini also stressed the importance of having the staff out in the areas seeing the day-to-day operation first hand.

Women's studies program rated as a strong success

By LISA GONSLAVES
Collegian Staff

Achieving both national recognition and popularity on campus, the Women's Studies Program at the University of Massachusetts has become one of the best programs in the country, said Arlene Avakian, staff assistant to the program.

"Students have transferred here for just Women's Studies from all over the country," Avakian said. "We have three students who transferred here from Iceland and Denmark."

The program, developed in 1974 because of the demands from students and faculty, now has about 30 majors and 20 minors, she said. Over 300 colleges and universities have started Women's Studies programs in an effort to acknowledge women and their contributions to history.

"Enrollment is terrific," Avakian said. One course was closed with 250 enrollments. "We have had to turn many students away."

Not only is the UMass Women's Studies program popular, but within Women's Studies programs circles, it is considered one of the top three programs in the country, Avakian said.

One of the program's faculty members has also received recognition. Leila Ahmed, assistant professor of Women's Studies, recently received a fellowship from the National Institute for the Humanities.

"Here at UMass, we take Women's Studies very seriously as a discipline. We're not just plugging women into other disciplines themselves, but we're restructuring the disciplines," she said.

Using history as an example of restructuring she said, "The way history is studied now leaves women out. The Women's Studies Program asks 'how can women create new ways to deal with history so women's issues will be central and not just on the side?'"

"The program is dedicated to creating a forum in the academic community for the development of frameworks and methodologies which integrate women's experience and scholarly disciplines," Avakian said. "Ultimately it will provide the incentive and experience necessary to affect change in the larger community."

In the past year, the American college populations have shifted and now women outnumber men for the first time in history, Avakian said.

Reagan says he wants increased tax cuts, reaffirms his position on several conservative issues

MANHATTAN, Kan. (AP) — President Reagan launched his fall political offensive on yesterday with a call to "go much further in reducing tax rates and make that whole jigsaw puzzle of a tax system more simple and fair for all."

The president, who just won a $100 billion tax increase over the next three years, did not specify the cuts and simplifications he has in mind. Nor did he say when he wants them, other than to call them a "goal on the horizon."

Reagan also took the occasion to reaffirm his commitment to school prayer and other conservative causes that many of his longtime allies have accused him of neglecting.

In a speech at Kansas State University, Reagan repeated his proposal for a constitutional amendment "that will make it unequivocally clear that children can hold voluntary prayer in their schools."

He restated, too, his support for anti-abortion legislation and a separate constitutional amendment that would make it more difficult for Congress to run up deficits in peacetime.

A year ago, Reagan won the largest tax cut in history, one that reduces individual rates by 25 percent over three years and prevents "bracket creep" due to inflation in future years. But the resulting cuts in federal revenues and burgeoning deficits led a reluctant president to embrace the $100 billion increase — or "tax reform" as he called it — this summer.

With mid-term congressional campaigns beginning in earnest across the country, one presidential aide said Reagan is "trying to line up conservatives."

In recent weeks, many leaders of the Republican right — the bedrock of Reagan's climb to the presidency — have been critical of the administration's record deficit spending and its reluctance to press for action on the controversial social issues that he set aside while pushing for his economic program.

The presidential aide, who asked that he not be identified by name, said Reagan would undertake an increasingly active travel schedule leading up to the Nov. 2 general elections with campaign stops from New York to California.

State announces plan to curb air pollution

BOSTON — After a decade of trying, the state announced yesterday it has a plan to clean up Massachusetts' dirty air to protect the public health.

The plan is a blueprint for meeting federal air quality standards by 1987 by cutting down on the smog and carbon monoxide from cars through special car inspections, controls on industry and use of public transportation, officials said.

"As a result of the efforts over the past decade, we are now able to say that we have a plan that we are submitting to the Environmental Protection Agency today which will achieve the ambient air quality standards necessary to protect public health for all five major pollutants here in Massachusetts," said Anthony D. Cortese, commissioner of the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering.

Cortese said air pollution most seriously affects the health of children, the elderly and people with respiratory disease.

The Massachusetts Lung Association applauded the plan, but spokeswoman Betsy Johnson added, "It's only a first step. Implementation is the vital factor that now has to be watched."

Of the five major pollutants, Cortese said Massachusetts meets the health standards for three of them, but fails the test when it comes to smog and carbon monoxide. Cars are the major source of both pollutants, he said. The state meets standards for sulfur dioxide, nitrogen dioxide and suspended particulates.

Cortese said the goal of the state's plan is to cut the carbon monoxide by 45 percent and the hydrocarbons — which turn into smog — by 40 percent by 1987.

The state hopes to accomplish that, in part, through a single annual inspection of cars for pollution emissions, he said. Set to begin in April 1983, the inspection will cost motorists under $10 and be given by service stations with special testing equipment expected to cost about $6,000, the officials said. The inspection will be combined with the current biannual safety inspections.

Only 15 percent of the cars are expected to flunk the standards, which will vary depending on the age of the car, Kenneth A. Hagg, Air Qulaity Control Divison director, said. Cars over 15 years old are exempt from the emission testing.

If properly maintained, a car will pass the test, Hagg said.

For those who fail, the average repair cost is about $20 to $25, he said.

Man confesses guilt to thirty counts of rape

PITTSFIELD — Prosecutors say they want a judge to send a Housatonic man to Walpole State Prison for 10 to 12 years after he pleaded guilty to 30 counts of rape with several children.

Judge Charles Alberti set sentencing for Sept. 23 for Brian Lee Hazel, 40, who pleaded guilty Wednesday to 30 counts of rape of a child under 14 years old. Hazel appeared in Berkshire County Superior Court.

Hazel was accused of having sex with one boy and five girls from Pittsfield at his home in Housatonic, according to Jim Overmyer, spokesman for Berkshire County District Attorney Anthony Ruberto.

Overmyer said investigators alleged that Hazel knew the families of the children, who now range from 9 to 12 years old. The incidents dated back to 1979, Overmyer said.

The case broke in May when Hazel was accused of fondling a girl, Overmyer said. The girl's brother complained to their mother, who in turn reported the case to police.

Hazel was released on $3,000 bail pending the sentencing. Overmyer said prosecutors recommended the Walpole sentence for Hazel, a construction consultant and former industrial arts teacher at a Pittsfield junior high school.

Boston Globe backs Dukakis and Sears

BOSTON — The Boston Globe endorsed former Gov. Michael S. Dukakis for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination yesterday, saying incumbent Edward J. King is one of the weakest Massachusetts governors in modern times.

Asked for his reaction to the endorsement at a news conference, King said, "I did not read the editorial."

"I'm not at all surprised, (and) I believe it will have little or no impact on the people who are going to vote for me."

The newspaper also endorsed former Boston City Councilor John W. Sears in the Republican gubernatorial primary.

The newspaper said it picked Dukakis "because he holds certain definable views about fairness and equity."

On the other hand, the Globe said King, who is seeking renomination, "is a weak governor, one of the weakest in the modern history of the commonwealth."

Although some observers have said there is no significant difference between Dukakis and King, the editorial said, "The gap between the two in intelligence, integrity and leadership abilities is massive."

The newspaper also said it was impressed that the four newly elected members of the Boston City Council had endorsed Dukakis.

"King has callously used the state's largest city as a scapegoat," the editorial said. "Anyone who is truly for Boston will vote for Dukakis."

The newspaper acknowledged that admirers say King works hard. But it said: "A workaholic executive who dithers and spins his wheels may be working hard, but that is not the same thing as providing leadership."

The Globe also described King's economic policies as a "bizarre home-grown variation of Reaganomics."

Convicted drunk driver killed in auto crash

SPRINGFIELD — A man killed in an early morning car crash while being followed by police lost his license in 1980 when he was convicted of drunken driving and vehicular homicide in the death of a 10-year-old boy, police said yesterday.

Between 1980 and his death, Edward Davis, 27, of Southwick, was arrested in 1981 on a second drunken driving charge and spent more than a year in jail. He was released June 24.

Davis was pronounced dead at the Wesson Unit of Baystate Medical Center shortly after he smashed his car into a pine tree on a residential street about 2 a.m., according to a report filed by Springfield Police Sgt. Herbert Webber.

The car speedometer was stuck at 50 miles an hour, Webber said. Davis, thrown out of the vehicle, was found on the ground beside the wreck.

Davis first lost his license after he pleaded guilty to vehicular homicide in the death of Richard Olsen Jr. of Westfield, Westfield Police Lt. George Varelas said. Varelas, who investigated the Jan. 17, 1980 crash, said Davis was driving down the breakdown lane on Southwick Road when he smashed into a car driven by the boy's mother. The child was decapitated.

Davis, who fled the crash on foot, was also convicted of driving while intoxicated and leaving the scene of an accident, according to Westfield Sgt. William Chandler.

Students become aware of campus groups by way of RSO referral fair

By PAULA HOYT
Collegian Correspondent

Representatives from about 35 Recognized Student Organizations (RSO) were present at a RSO referral fair outside the Student Union building yesterday.

The purpose of the fair was to provide information about and exposure to student groups offering special services, programs, or materials.

"The fair will hopefully be informative to new students and those who are not aware of the RSO services," said Margaret Small, co-coordinator of the fair.

Posters, t-shirts, and equipment displays were part of the publicity used by groups to inform and recuit interested students.

"We have a fairly good turnout of RSO group representatives," she said.

Among the groups represented were religious organizations such as the United Christian Foundation, as well as the Handicapped Affairs Office and Foreign Student Affairs, Counseling and Career Development, and intramurals.

"It is hard to get members. At the fair we were able to displays aspects of the club to students," said Christine LeBlanc, Outing Club member. The Outing Club displayed tents, backpacks, and skis available for rental by club members.

The Commuter Collective, a student run service for off-campus students was also at the fair. The group helps students find off-campus housing, organizes rent control campaigns, and provides lockers and the commuter lounge for off-campus students. Barbara Bradley of Commuter Collective encouraged people to find out what the Collective is about and welcomed new ideas.

University Child Care provided job listings for babysitters and information on student job openings in child care.

The Black Mass Communications Project (BMCP), Union Program Council (UPC), UMass Music Theater Guild, Union Video Council, Earthfoods, and the Craft Shop were among the other student groups distributing information and vying for members.

Israel renews attack; rejects settlement plan

(AP) — Israel rejected the new all-Arab plan for a Middle East settlement yesterday and sent its warplanes against Syrian anti-aircraft missiles in Lebanon for the second straight day, reporting four more batteries demolished.

Lebanese radio said Israeli jets also struck Syrian armor positions in Lebanon, further heightening the threat of a showdown between the tens of thousands of Israeli and Syrian troops remaining in that war-battered land.

Sources at the Arab summit conference in Fez, Morocco, said the Arab leaders approved Syrian President Hafez Assad's request to cancel the six-year-old Arab League mandate for his Syrian "peacekeeping force" in Lebanon, enabling him to withdraw the troops. But Israel questioned Assad's sincerity.

"I think this (Syrian readiness to leave Lebanon) is lip service and there is no reality in it," Chief of Staff Lt. Gen. Raphael Eytan told Israeli army radio.

In related developments yesterday:

— Secretary of State George P. Shultz, testifying before the House Foreign Affairs Committee, called for congressional support of President Reagan's Mideast peace plan and said he believes there is a "reasonable chance" the plan's key goals can be achieved.

— The 800 U.S. Marines who helped supervise the withdrawal of Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas from west Beirut loaded vehicles onto landing craft in preparation for their scheduled departure Friday from Lebanon.

— Lebanese army forces trying to reassert government control over west Beirut moved into the Palestinian refugee camp Bourj el-Barajneh, heavily bombarded during Israel's June-August siege. Israeli forces continued to hold their positions in Beirut, however, even though the U.S.-negotiated agreement that ended the siege called for their pullback.

The Fez summit, concluding late Thursday, produced the first collective Arab proposals for peace with Israel since the creation of the Jewish state in 1948.

The plan contained elements long rejected by the Israelis: the creation of an independent, PLO-governed Palestinian state in the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and Gaza Strip, and incorporating the Arab-populated sector of Jerusalem in that state.

The proposals, as outlined by summit sources, do not explicitly offer recognition of Israel.

In Israel, Prime Minister Menachem Begin's spokesman, Uri Porat, dismissed the summit, saying it was no different from previous such meetings "and there is no reason to pay attention to it."

Young Peruvian girl doing well after life-saving heart operation

BOSTON (AP) — Three-yearold Anita Asto's heart underwent repair yesterday, and now the wife of the president of the United States and the wife of the president of Peru are trying to help her get an American mother.

While Anita was in the recovery room, Nancy Reagan was on the telephone to her counterpart, Violetta Belaunde, in Lima.

The American first lady had gotten a telegraphed plea from Mrs. Robert Ulchak of Quincy, Mass., who had brought Anita to the United States from South America and needed help in adopting the girl.

Mrs. Reagan explained that the Ulchaks couldn't spare the time or money to go to Peru to go through adoption procedures. They spent eight weeks there last year to adopt another child, a boy named John Paul, and it was then that they learned of the plight of Anita, who lived in the same orphanage.

Anything Mrs. Belaunde could do would be welcome, Mrs. Reagan said.

Anita was born with only one heart ventricle instead of two, and an operation was needed to increase blood flow to the lungs. Her blood was getting insufficient oxygen, causing her to tire easily and raising the danger of dots.

Mrs. Belaunde told Mrs. Reagan that she had talked to the secretary general of the presidency — the Peruvian chief of staff — about steps to be taken. Since the case is in the hands of the judiciary, she said, a presidential recommendation had gone out to speed up the process.

Mrs. Reagan's press secretary, Sheila Tate, who related all this, said the Peruvian president, Fernando Belaunde Terry, got on the telephone and told Mrs. Reagan that he was "extremely grateful for work you have done on this case."

As for Anita, a spokeswoman for Children's Hospital Medical Center in Boston said, "It sounds like she's going to have a reasonably normal life." The operation was performed here Thursday morning by Dr. Aldo Castaneda, the hospital's surgeon-in-chief and cardiovascular surgeon-in-chief.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Local Govt. vs. First Amendment

Stoughton is an average sized community southwest of Boston which is going through a difficult struggle. Some merchants have opened an adult bookstore in the center of town and many residents are vehemently against the existence of what they believe is an eyesore on the community.

At no time during the day will there be less than five picket-carrying demonstrators outside the store blocking the sidewalk and occasionally verbally harassing people who venture into the store. Some have even taken pictures of the people who frequent the store and jotted down their license plate numbers.

Stoughton could do a much better job of hurting their adult bookstore by ignoring it altogether. Instead, what has actually happened is the curiosity of those who might not be inclined to go to such a place has been aroused. People are coming from near and far to see the bookstore which has been widely publicized by local papers and Boston television stations.

It's unfortunate that we live in a society where a person is considered to be strange and perveted because he or she enjoys hardcore pronography. We have a governor by the name of Edward J. King who wants to ban cable TV companies from showing pornographic movies. We also have a president who says movies were better in the 1930's when people kept their clothes on and wants to put his beliefs into action.

Is there a possibility that someday people will be content to let others manage their own lives as they see fit?

It would appear that those in authority are content to have people run around like trained dogs and obey their local police officer. And this is supposed to be a free country.

There are too many people in general who think it's okay to have control over other people's lives. They say people aren't smart enough to govern their own destiny, they are referring to the average person of course, not themselves. This is the kind of closed minded conservatism that has pervaded every level of government in this country and around the world for time immemorial.

The worst offender of all is local government. Local governing bodies are almost invariably run by idealogues who want to make their town the model suburb, with clean living and fine upstanding citizens in the community. Surely Ed Smith of Buckland, who was instrumental in the book-banning controversy in that northern Massachusetts town earlier this year, is considered a fine upstanding citizen.

The demonstrators in Stoughton are probably fine upstanding citizens also. They don't protest nuclear power plants, military overspending or the draft. No, they have more important things to attend to like the assault on adult bookstores. Perhaps the Stoughton demonstrators will fail in their efforts to persuade local officials to rid their community of the "evil" bookstore. But I suspect they're going to win.

kich Nangle

These citizens have some valid concerns. They worry that their property values will go down. They don't want "undesireables" in their town. They want to keep the Combat Zone out of the suburbs.

Ignorance has run rampant in Stoughton, as it probably would in any community faced with a similar problem. Despite this fact, I believe I have at least a little bit in common with the protesters. Certainly if an adult bookstore opened up in my hometown of Dedham, I wouldn't be totally pleased. But I'd accept it, because what the people of Stoughton fail to realize is that this store would not be in existence if the market for it did not exist.

Yes, there are people who enter these bookstores and purchase magazines (much more lurid than Playboy or Penthouse) and blow-up dolls, watch peep shows (which may soon be included in the Stoughton offering), and purchase X-rated movies.

I have been to the adult bookstores in Boston's Combat Zone and I think the products sold there are best used as joke presents on somebody's birthday. I have no problems buying Penthouse magazine but most of the products in an adult bookstore are not for me. That's where the similarity between myself and the Stoughton protesters ends.

No one should have the right to decide what things people should be allowed to see and read.

There is a document known as the First Amendment which is supposed to protect the public's right to the free flow of information. Even if this constitutional law did not exist, it is still morally correct. But the protesters believe they are the public's conscience. In that sense they're no better than the Moral Majority.

Radical chic or dedication

I had to come up with something to write about, fast, and it got me to thinking. In the first place, what should I write about? In the second place, why am I writing at all?

Was I experiencing one of those loathesome occupational identity crisises, where you wonder why you are where you are, doing what you're doing? After thinking awhile, and drinking lots of beer, answers began to come to me. Of course! As a columnist, one of my primary functions is to serve as sort of an activist and make the reader aware of current events and how they might be affected by them. I then must offer advice or insight into what they might do to help. Even though these columns might sound the same after awhile, and aren't always funny, somebody's got to do them, right? I still wasn't convinced, but I kept on thinking and imbibing alcohol in hopes of having some sort of creative revelation.

Josh Meyer

Now that school is underway, its like being pinched into a rude awakening. I read and hear the same news as I did in the summer, but its relevance becomes much more important now that I'm in school. Back in this vast sea of peers, I begin to see how close to home these issues hit. Just now the ravages of Reaganomics are becoming evident, like when friends who can't afford school anymore don't show up. Or when I can't get into a class because there aren't enough people left to teach it. Even the threats of much broader issues seem more real now than they did a few weeks ago.

Take the anti-nuke movement. Yeah, I went to the rally in Central Park in July, but now I wonder why I went. It was a lot of fun, but somehow the horrifying reality of a nuclear war was about the farthest thing from my mind that day. I wasn't alone in that either. I talked to many afterwards who spoke only of Bruce Springsteen and Jackson Browne.

Now I don't hear so much about it. The hard core of activists remains of course, but all the fair weather fringe elements have crumbled in direct proportion to the popularity of the issue. There were one and one half million people there. I wonder how many of them are still active in the movement? While I would never condemn any action done truly for the purpose of change, I question the underlying motives that promoted the action. When an issue becomes radically chic, suddenly flocks of people are willing to help, until their attention is caught by something else. I admire the people still crying out for El Salvador, but they are few and far between.

So when I think about it, there is plenty for me to write about, because there's plenty of issues large and small that affect all of us. There's also plenty for us to do about them if we really want to. Student action is supporting actions they believe in, and in voicing dissent where necessary are two of the most important and worthwhile action aspects of a college education.

At a school as progressive, diverse, and highly esteemed as UMass (no kidding), this action generates even more impact as it sets an example for others to follow.

So now I think I've finally understood why I'm here, and why I stay up until sunrise once a week writing these columns. The value of a university education lies not only in the passive experiences of the classroom, but also in the active experiences gained by sharing in some common cause. By thinking big and working small, students can make a difference. There are infinite issues and events that will effect us all this year. We can't sit back and wait to see what happens. We're going to have to be the ones to take action, for our own sake if nothing else. As the saying goes, "A man's character determines his fate." Why could something so obvious be so hard for me to figure out? Now that I had straightened that out, I set my alarm for two hours later, just in time for my first class.

Fast Times at Ridgemont High accurate,tender and very funny

By ANDREW GORDON
Collegian Staff

It would be very easy for someone writing about Fast Times at Ridgemont High to look at it quickly and shallowly and label it exploitive, sexist and superficial. They could do that; but they would be wrong. Fast Times at Ridgemont High captures high school and that age and does so accurately, tenderly and with great insight. It is also one of the funniest movies to open this year.

Like another youth oriented, American Graffiti, Fast Times follows several young people through the tribulations of adolescence, 1980's style. It taps into emotions we've all had — fear, curiosity, love, lust, insecurity — and that's why the film works; we can laugh because we've been there ourselves and because the laughs are never at the expense of the characters. We would not want to laugh at them; at ourselves.

Stacy (wonderfully played by Jennifer Jason Leigh) is a virginal freshman curious about boys and sex and love. She gets advice from her more experienced best friend Linda (Phoebe Cates, from Paradise) and enters into relationships with Mark Ratner (Brian Backer) and his best friend Mike Damone (Robert Romanus). Her older brother Brad (Judge Reinhold) is also a central figure, as he jumps from job to job at fast food chains. The film's major comic relief comes from Sean Penn, as Spicoli. Penn turns in a tour de force as the terminally wasted valley boy. Not since John Belushi's Bluto Blutarsky in Animal House has someone done so much with a supporting role. His eyes exude innocence and his slow Californese voice makes simple phrases like "Hey Bud, let's party" sound like the funniest words ever uttered.

These characters share a common characteristic: they are sincere and they are essentially good. In fact, everyone is. Like Breaking Away, even the bad guys turn out to be not so bad. A slick dude picks Stacy up and deflowers her. Although we realize he has no intention of seeing her again, his bad guy role is contradicted when he sends her flowers and a warm card. Which is not to say that the film looks back at high school through rose-tinted glasses. Good people can hurt each other, and they do. Characters fall in and out of love with each other, best friends fight and dates are marred by nervous silence and awkwardness. The film doesn't fuzz social reality. Neither does it ignore consequences. One might think a comedy of this sort would try to exploit teen sex for all it was worth, but of the film's two sex scenes, one creates an unwanted pregnancy and a great deal of grief for Stacy.

The performances are excellent. Every actor creates a full-bodied and real character. We come to know and like them; not like in a piece of trash like Porky's, whose characters were a bunch of interchangeable idiots. No, the characters of Fast Times at Ridgemont High are special, like friends. First time director Amy Heckerling must be commended for keeping the film subtle and personal; not going for broad, cheap laughs. A film well worth seeing.

Carrie (Hallie Eckstein) gets some love advice from Linda (Phoebe Cates) and Stacy (Jennifer Jason Leigh).

Ratner, played by Brian Becker challenges his best friend Damone (Robert Romenus) after discovering he has slept with his girlfriend.

Trailers . . . .

Columbia Pictures has announced its Christmas lineup. Top on the list is The Toy starring Jackie Gleason and Richard Pryor. Gleason is a filthy rich businessman who "buys" Pryor as a toy for his spoiled son. Richard Donner (The Omen, Superman) directed the film. Next on their list is Tootsie, which stars Dustin Hoffman as a struggling actor. Unable to get a real part, he is hired for a soap opera, as a woman. Hoffman plays much of the film in drag. Sydney Pollack directed the film, which also stars Jessica Lange, Charles Durning and Teri Garr. Gandhi stars Ben Kingsley as the Mahatma. An all-star cast includes Candice Bergen, John Gielgud, Martin Sheen and Trevor Howard...Sting, of the Police, stars in Brimstone and Treacle, a psychodrama in which he plays a deranged young man who tries to break up a family. Sting played Ace in Quadrophenie and was in several other films, but Brimstone will be the test of his acting ability. The role is very complex, with a number of powerful dramatic scenes. The film will be released this semester. The soundtrack, with music by the Police and The Go-Go's, is out now...Psycho II takes up 23 years after the original. Norman Bates, again played by Anthony Perkins, is released from an asylum and returns to the same motel. Vera Miles will also return...Raiders II, on the other hand, will be a prequal, taking up three years before the original began. Harrison Ford will again play Indiana Jones, Karen Allen will not return...Margot Kidder's role in Superman III has been shortened tremendously. Annette O'Toole will enter the picture as an flame of Superman's. Richard Pryor is the villain...Teri Shields gets to playe executive producer on Sahara, the new Brooke Sheilds movie. John Guillerman will direct...Pat Conroy's book, The Lords of Discipline, will become a film directed by Fran Roddam (Quadrophenia). David Keith, who played Richard Gere's buddy in An Officer and a Gentleman, will star. Also in the film are G.D. Spradlin (Apocalypse Now) and Judge Reinhold (Fast Times at Ridgemont High)...Honkeytonk Man has Eastwood again directing himself. Hope old Clint gets his act together better than Firefox...John Landis will direct Whereabouts, starring Timothy Hutton. It will be a comedy/mystery. There probably won't be any helicopter shots...Landis will also direct Clue, a spinoff from the Parker Brothers game. The film may have several different endings...Monty Python's John Cleese will star in Privates on Parade...Foster Brooks plays a drunk airplane pilot in Jerry Lewis' Smorgasbord ...Local Best bet: Between the Lines and The Atomic Cafe tonight and tomorrow at The Amherst Cinema...Gene Wilder and Gilda Radner will be reunited in Kissing, despite the fact that their Hanky Panky was a financial flop...Trailers Trivia: The following is the last three lines of what movie? "You're the quarterback." "Well yeah, now how'd you know that?" (Pause) "Yes, I'd love a cup of coffee." Answer to last weeks trivia question: Joe Spinell is probably the most nonfamous bit actor working in films today. He has worked steadily in hundreds of films over the past decade, because even in fairly big speaking roles he is virtually unrecognizable from one film to the next. Recent roles were the gun-toting maitre D' in Night Shift and the cop in Maniac. His other films include the Rockys, both Godfathers, Brubaker and Taxi Driver.

FRIDAY THE 13th, PART III

"Hello? Hello, is anyone in there? Who's up there? Rick? Rick is that you? Is that you in there? Who's over there? Hey, is anyone under there? Rick?" — So reads almost the entire screenplay of Friday the 13th, Part III. When the characters aren't posing silly interrogatives, they're wandering into an old barn and getting chopped up. But that's not all, we've seen that before. Now we get to see it in 3D. The enjoyment of graphic mass murder put to the visual pleasure of a GAF viewmaster. And swell polarized glasses that give you the best darn headache you've ever had (the Anacin people must have had some input in their design).

The story is typically ridiculous. Again we have Jason, this time running around in a goalie mask (like Jerry Cheevers gone berserk), and a houseload of stunning women and simply men. One by one they are dispatched, in manners we saw in the first two Fridays. The film's conclusion, in fact, is a shot-by-shot remake of the first film's.

The 3D is the movie's primary asset. While it is always slightly fuzzy, it does work. The director, Steve Miner, correctly chose to camp it up — hence we have dopers passing you a joint from out of the screen and a T.V. watcher who adjusts an antenna into your face. Lots of knives, too. Sick, exploitive, trashy, but fun.

Gene Wilder and Gilda Radner on the set of Hanky Panky. The two will be reunited for Kissing, due out next summer.

In another part of the project, the computer will assist in processing paperwork like grant applications or student information, Croft said. While a human must feed the computer information, the computer could keep track of the information, and check it over to make sure it is complete and correct.

The computer will be used to replace routine work now done by office workers, Croft said, but will not replace people.

Croft said this is the first private grant he and Lesser have received for this kind of work.

Five COINS faculty members will work on parts of the project with seven graduate students.

telecommunications system, Olver said, while states including California, Pennsylvania and Texas have had considerable experience with educational networks and have used their systems to provide training to the employees of high technology firms.

"A clear need for more and better trained personnel has been repeatedly called for by the high technology industries in Massachusetts," Olver said.

"It's very special that the state's land-grant university took the lead on this," Collins said of UMass' initiation of the project. "That's the type of thing a land-grant university should be doing."

Republican candidates debate; focus on the Democrats' failures

BOSTON (AP) — The Republican candidates for governor avoided personal attacks on one another last night and saved their ammunition for their Democratic rivals in their final statewide, televised debate before the GOP primary.

"Something is rotten in the state of Massachusetts," former Boston City Councilor John W. Sears said as he opened the debate with an attack on the administrations of Gov. Edward J. King and former Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

"I am embarassed by our state government," said state Rep. Andrew H. Card Jr. of Holbrook. "Government must be open and its officials must be, above all else, must be honest."

The hour-long exchange at Boston's historic Faneuil Hall offered the best opportunity of the campaign for Sears, Card and John R. Lakian to woo voters before Tuesday's GOP primary. Four television stations in Boston and Springfield plus about a dozen radio stations provided the largest audience of the political season.

Lakian spent almost all of his opening and closing statements defending himself against a newspaper inquiry that found discrepancies in his campaign statements. He said the article was printed because "I'm a dangerous type of Republican. I can beat the Democrats in Massachusetts."

There were no major suprises or even substantial differences on issues like corruption, crime and housing.

CAMPUS CRUSADE FOR CHRIST

Booters tie at 0-0

By CHARISSE E. FEINERMAN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team hosted a scrimmage against Amherst College yesterday that ended in a 0-0 tie during which both teams suffered losses in player injuries.

Coach Jeff Gettler intended the scrimmage to be a "try-out" period for players who lurked somewhere in the grey zone. That is to say, to see which junior varsity players could compete on a varsity level. Gettler will undoubtedly need some new players to move to the varsity squad since he lost three of his starters to injuries that will keep them on the bench for at least the beginning of the regular season.

Minutemen who could very possibly be wearing varsity jerseys on Tuesday's game against University of Bridgeport are Eon John and Herb Sidman.

It seems that Amherst College coach Peter Gooding's intentions were similar to those of Gettler, as far as trying out some JV players, and it seems ironic that the Amherst squad lost three players to injuries as well.

"Amherst played well, we didn't," said Gettler.

Gooding had other feelings about yesterday's scrimmage. "The University team is very well organized and they have a lot of spirit. They are ready to roll for their season."

Gooding said that his team was rather clumsy, and perhaps could have had a bit of improvement in their playing tactics.

"The University team is technically very strong. Had it been a regular season game they would have beaten us...No one was trying to win. It was more of a tryout than anything else," said Gooding.

Gooding had nothing but praise for the UM squad and the new coach. "...Well disciplined, crisp, clean game, that was under control. The University team was very purposeful, impressive, and will play very well during the season."

The Minutemen will be hosting their first game of the season on Tuesday against Bridgeport on Boyden Varsity fields.

Nation's first private spaceship completes successful test flight

MATAGORDA ISLAND, Texas (AP) — The first rocket ever launched by U.S. private enterprise blasted off flawlessly from this coastal island yesterday and flew a 10¼-minute suborbital mission before splashing down in the Gulf of Mexico.

"Everything looked perfect. It went right on down the pike," said mission director Donald K. Slayton, a retired astronaut.

Conestoga 1, a gleaming white, 37-foot-tall rocket, climbed to an altitude of 192 miles, arched over the Gulf and separated from a dummy payload that spewed 400 pounds of water into space. The payload and rocket splashed down 321 miles from the launch pad.

The launch by Space Services Inc. (SSI) of America was a "victory for private enterprise," said company founder and chairman David Hannah, a Houston businessman.

"This showed that a group of private investors can get together and launch a rocket in a responsible way and well within a commercially feasible limit," said Hannah.

Hannah said a dozen oil companies have expressed interest in using SSI to place satellites in orbit to monitor oil wells in remote sites and to search for minerals and oil deposits.

SSI plans to build a multiplestage rocket system capable of orbiting a 500-pound satellite about 500 miles above Earth.

Conestoga 1 was built around a solid-fuel rocket motor from a surplus Minuteman missile. SSI bought the motor from the government for $365,000 and hired a contractor, Space Vectors Inc., to build the spacecraft.

Next on SSI's agenda is launching a satellite and raising $15 million to $20 million to finance it, Hannah said. The company has yet to obtain a launch site but is negotiating for a location in Hawaii, he said.

More than 300 spectators — about 200 guests and more than 100 members of the media — stood in a pasture and applauded after the rocket was launched into a blue sky and disappeared from view. Champagne bottles were popped.

The 10:15 a.m. CDT launch came 15 minutes after the scheduled time because of brief delays ordered when data communications were lost momentarily.

Soviet freighter leaves Scotland; Reagan censures British company

LONDON (AP) — A Soviet freighter steamed out of Glasgow, Scotland yesterday with turbines for the Siberian natural gas pipeline. The Reagan administation immediately imposed sanctions on the British company that supplied them.

The sanctions bar U.S. exports of oil and gas equipment to John Brown Engineering, which made the six turbines with U.S. General Electric rotors.

President Reagan banned exports of American technology to the Soviet Union to protest Soviet support for the Dec. 13 martial law crackdown in Poland. In June he extended the ban to include foreign companies using U.S.-licensed technology — an extension Western European firms say violates international law.

The Soviet news agency Tass praised Britain's decision to ship the turbines "despite Washington's campaign of blackmail and intimidation designed to frustrate the participation of West European countries in this project."

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger returned to Washington on yesterday after a three-day visit to Britain, including talks with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher at which British officials reported that both sides stuck to their positions.

U.S. Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige announced the sanctions against John Brown just hours after the 4,000-ton freighter Stakhanovets Yermolenko left Glasgow on its seven-day voyage to Leningrad.

John Brown was the fourth European firm penalized for helping the Soviet Union construct the 3,500-mile pipeline. Similar export bans have been imposed on two French companies and an Italian firm in the past two weeks.

The 100th year is here tomorrow

By BILLY SHEA
Collegian Staff

When you stroll through the gates of Alumni Stadium tomorrow to watch the University of Massachusetts football team kick off their 100th season with a clash against West Chester State, it would be wise to invest in a 1982 football roster because the 1981 roster just won't do the job.

Fifth-year head coach Bob Pickett lost 21 players, including eight starters from the defensive unit, to graduation. Despite the loss of such defensive intimidators as Eric Cregan and Pete DiTommaso, the Minutemen have again been picked as pre-season favorites to capture the Yankee Conference crown.

One reason for this optimistic forecast for the Minutemen is that senior tailback Garry Pearson is back to put the finishing touch on an outstanding collegiate football career.

The 5'11", 185 pound speedster from Bristol, Conneticut is already the UMass all-time rushing leader and will undoubtedly be called upon again by Pickett to carry much of the offensive burden for the Minutemen.

Opening the holes for Pearson will be hard-hitting fullback Tom Murray along with offensive lineman Tony Pasquale and tri-captain Jerry Gordon. Dean Pecevich will handle the quarterback duties once again, taking over for Barrett McGrath who had knee surgery done over the summer and still isn't ready for action.

Pecevich will be throwing to junior tight end Gary Freker and senior wide receiver Ron Mangarelli. Freker, a 6'4" 240 pounder from Malden had been sidelined for a week of practice with a knee injury but should be ready for the opener.

With the offensive unit in the capable hands of experienced individuals, the defensive unit will be the question mark for the Minutemen.

All-Americans Dwayne Lopes and Grady Fuller return to the UMass secondary and Scott Rose will reclaim his middle nose guard position as the only starting returnees to the defensive unit. Todd Comeau, a part-time starter last year, will handle one defensive end spot while junior Don Keefer will see considerable action at the other defensive end position.

Coach Pickett will also unveil a freshman to join the likes of Lopes and Fuller in the secondary. John Crowley will fill the position vacated by the graduation of Pete Spadafora and will join Glen Holden as newcomers to the secondary.

As far as West Chester State goes, well, they're from West Chester, Pa. and their nickname is the Golden Rams. A Division II team, the Golden Rams will rumble the Alumni Stadium with hopes of knocking off an established Division I AA team and boost their own football program.

Past action for UMass football players.

West Chester's hopes depend on fourth-year starting quarterback Ron Gaynor. Gaynor threw 1416 yards and 11 touchdowns last year so expect the ball to be flying around Alumni Stadium tomorrow, especially if the Golden Rams are forced to play catch-up football.

"We plan to throw the ball a lot more this year," said head coach Otte Kneidinger, "You can expect us to spread out our attack."

The ground game will feature returning letterman Ron Perkins. Perkins amassed a total of 1052 yards during the course of last season. He also scored 14 touchdowns.

This West Chester State game will be the only chance Minuteman fans will have to see their team play at home during September since the next three games are away.

Kick-off time Saturday is at 1:30 p.m.

The NFL scramble

By ELLIOTT KALB
Collegian Correspondent

If there is no strike, it should be one helluva season in this year 2 B.H. (Before Herschel) in the National Football League. Franco Harris and Walter Payton continue their chase to catch Jim Brown and O.J. Simpson on the all-time rushing list, Don Shula will get his 200th career coaching victory, and Joe Montana and Ken Anderson are fresh off the banquet circuit to lead their respective Super Bowl squads.

Who will win in the NFL this season? I like teams with a potentially great defense, teams with solid coaching and stability in the front office, teams with a couple of rookies who will be able to help immediately and shore up weaknesses, and teams with favorable schedules. That is why the Tampa Bay Buccaneers are going to win Super Bowl XVII in the Rose Bowl next January 30.

Tampa Bay won their division last year by winning four of its last five games. John McKay, their only head coach in Tampa Bay's history, turned an expansion team into a playoff team in three years. Only one other team in the NFL last season allowed fewer touchdowns (Philadelphia). Quarterback Doug Williams is coming off his best season as a pro, completing over 50 percent of his passes for 3,568 yards with 19 TD's. Sean Farrell and Booker Reese will help out immediately at guard and defensive end as the top draft picks.

Elsewhere in the NFC, I like the Giants, the Dallas Cowboys, the Detroit Lions, and the San Francisco 49ers to gain playoff berths. The Giants need a quarterback, a fullback (Rob Carpenter is currently sitting out due to contract disputes), and a tight end to complete a super team. No team has better special teams and their defense is awesome. But, their offense is shaky.

Dallas is as usual multi-talented and could walk away with the conference. Their secondary is a weak link however, as the 49ers found out last year. They can be passed on.

Detroit has big play capabilities everytime runs with the ball, and a solid offensive and defensive line combined with the league's best placekicker (Ed Murray) could surprise a lot of people.

San Francisco is the best in the West.

In the AFC, things are more wide open. The teams you can depend on NOT to make the playoffs include the Colts, the Patriots, the Oilers, and the Seahawks. That leaves 10 teams and five playoff berths. A cut above these squads, but probably not playoff caliber are Pittsburgh, Denver, and Buffalo. Any of these three could prove me wrong and make the Super Bowl, but everything would have to fall in place. Buffalo can be passed on, and they have a very weak kicking game. Their schedule is tougher than most and they used up all their luck last year against New England and New York. Pittsburgh and Denver are old.

This leaves seven teams to make those five playoff spots. Kansas City may be one year away. The two defensive ends, Art Still and Mike Bell are a treat to watch, and the defense is as good as any in the NFL. Once they settle their quarterback situation (between Bill Kenney and Steve Fuller) -- watch out. Let's eliminate Cincinnati, too. No reason, in particular.

I like the New York Jets, the Miami Dolphins, the Los Angeles Raiders, the San Diego Chargers, and the Cleveland Browns to make the playoffs. Cleveland and Oakland fell in '81 after spectacular 1980 seasons. Even if 1st round USC draft picks like running back Marcus Allen (Raiders) and linebacker Chip Banks (Browns) don't help out, seeing "Rocky III" should inspire them. I've learned never to count Miami out of anything, but they don't have the quarterback to go all the way. Which leaves the Chargers and the Jets. I refuse to pick a team with as pourous a defense as San Diego's, though I'm in awe of San Diego's offense and of Kellen Winslow in particular. He is to football what the Beatles were to popular music: he is so far ahead of everyone else, he must be judged on different standards.

The Jets have a mature quarterback, Richard Todd, who came into his own last season. They also have an explosive defensive line which puts more pressure on the opposing QB (66 sacks last season) than anyone else.

Primary elections tomorrow

By KEVIN BOWE
and MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Staff

Voters throughout Massachusetts will cast votes tomorrow in the Democratic and Republican primaries.

Included on the ballot are candidates seeking the Democratic and Republican nominations for Governor, Lieutenant Governor, U.S. Senate and a number of state and county offices. Winners of the primary will appear on the regular election ballot on November 2.

Only voters registered in Amherst are eligible to vote here. Others must vote in the town in which they are registered or by absentee ballot. Registered voters may vote by absentee ballot only if arrangements are made with the Town Clerk in their town before noon today.

To vote in the November 2 election, voters must be registered by October 5, 1982.

Registered Amherst voters will vote in the following locations: Precinct 1 voters, including residents of Puffton Village, Brandywine and Townehouse Apartments, will cast their ballots in the North Congregational Church Hall, on North Pleasant Street opposite Meadow Road. Precinct 2 voters, including residents of Butterfield dormitory, will vote in the North Fire Station, on East Pleasant Street at Tillson Farm Road. Precinct 3 voters, including residents of all dorms in Northeast, Sylvan, Orchard Hill and Central except Butterfield, will vote in the Lutheran Church Lounge, on North Pleasant Street near Marks Meadow School. Voters in Precincts 4 and 5, including residents of Southwest, will vote in the Bangs Community Center off Kellogg Ave., near the Amherst Post Office. Precinct 6 voters, including residents of Brittany Manor and Southwood Apartments, will vote in the Fort River School on South East Street. Voters in Precincts 7 and 8, including most of South Amherst, will vote at the Crocker Farm School and Munson Library Buildings, respectively.

All polling locations will be open tomorrow from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m.

In local races State Representative James G. Collins and State Senator John Olver are running unopposed for their party nominations. James Tripp is the unopposed, Republican state senator candidate who will run against Olver in November.

In other local contests, Salvatore A. Polito and Patrick M. Goggins are seeking the Democratic nominations for Clerk and Courts and County Commissioner of Hampshire County, respectively. Stanley J. Kozera and Sean E. O'Leary are trying for the Democratic nomination for Hampshire County Register of Deeds. Republican W. Michael Ryan and Democrat Thomas G. Simons seek their respective parties' nomination for District Attorney of the Northwestern District.

Governors Edward J. King and Michael S. Dukakis are competing a second time for the Democratic nomination for governor, but this time with King as the incumbent.

In the 1978 gubernatorial primary election, King defeated Dukakis by more than 75,000 votes.

Voter turnout could decide election

By DIANE KADZIS
Collegian Staff

With just one day remaining before the Massachusetts gubernatorial primary election, ardent campaign efforts of democratic candidates Governor Edward J. King and Michael S. Dukakis are taking a back seat to voter turnout as the final determinant of which party member will retain prospect for occupying the corner office.

John Dukakis, spokesman for his father Michael Dukakis, said yesterday in a telephone interview that voters are not faced with a "case where they can sit at home and assume one of the candidates will win."

Characterizing the 1982 race as one of the most competitive political events this state has witnessed, Dukakis said the "aggressive" nature of the campaign and the "grudge-match" involved has given neither candidate a defined edge over the other. The result is that "voter turnout is the key in this election, he said.

According to predictions released last week by Massachusetts Secretary of State Michael J. Connolly, who oversees state elections, over 1 million voters are expected to cast ballots for Tuesday's primary — a record breaking count.

Recognizing the potential voting power of students, Dukakis said a consolidation of student interests could take place to give Dukakis and his "progressive attitudes" a place in Massachusetts during the next four years only if students use their influence by showing up at the polls.

Otherwise, he said "we are going to have four more years of the same kind of politics we've been having for the past four years."

Paul Quinn, a media volunteer for the re-elect King campaign, said the number of people who vote in tommorrow's primary could decide a victory for either camp in the face of an indefinite advantage, but added that the "bottom-line" of the race is a "fight of records."

The divided political philosophies represented by each candidate and reflected in their performance while governor, gave rise to high financed campaigns in which excesses of $5 million has already been spent to convince voters by the two opposing camps, Dukakis said.

Quinn said the purpose of the large-scale advertising move for the King administration is to portray the incumbent candidate and his record as they are — "conservative and traditional."

Because King's "can-do" administration set the tone for the GOP race for governor by first initiating heavy use of the media, Dukakis said the "campaign has taken a low road" and has resulted in an upswing focus on "sensational issues" such as capital punishment rather than "everyday issues" such as crisis in local government.

But Quinn said by playing up the "Pretty-Boy-Floyds" who fail to take a stand on the issues of the day, the political tactics reflected in King's reliance on advertising have revealed "politicing at its best."

No one can make an intelligent vote without knowing where they (the candidates) stand on the other's issues," he said.

Democrats to push new jobs program

WASHINGTON — Congressional Democrats, trying to ride the momentum of their veto override victory, plan to seek quick action in the House this week on $1 billion jobs program opposed by the Reagan administration.

The Democratic initiative, which backers claim could put 200,000 unemployed to work on bridge and highway repair projects around the nation by the end of the year, seems certain to touch off a week of heightened partisan bickering.

With congressional elections less than two months away, the remaining battles of the almost-expired 97th Congress are expected to be dominated by politics.

Democrats, who have won few skirmishes since the 1980 elections, remained exhilarated from the 60-30 Senate and 301-117 House votes last week overriding President Reagan's veto of a $14.2 billion spending bill he deemed too costly.

Hoping to strike again while ahead, Democratic leaders decided late last week to try to bring the jobs bill to the House floor, out of schedule, by mid week.

"Now seemed like a good time to try to get this thing moving. If we can get two thirds to override a veto, we should be able to get the votes needed for a jobs bill," said a Democrati leadership aide who asked not to be identified.

"I can no longer accept in good conscience the president's plea for patience. The American people need to see acton now before it is too late," said House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, in a statement Sunday.

"Today we are paying out more than $20 billion in unemployment compensation alone. This says nothing of the lost output, the lost revenues, that result from today's high unemployment."

O'Neill said that funding for the program would equal 5 percent of the cost of the country's unemployment compensation bill.

Congress is in its final push before a scheduled early October adjournment.

The announcement last week by congressional leaders that they would not call a post-election "lame duck" session to deal with problems in the Social Security system meant that all the remaining work of the session must be done in the next three weeks.

Since the new fiscal year begins Oct. 1, the priority for Congress is to provide the money needed to run the government. But of 10 appropriations bills to fund federal agencies, only one — military construction — has been approved by either chamber of Congress.

39 killed in crash

A train ripped through a bus carrying West German soccer fans home Sunday from a weekend tour, killing 39 of the 40 men and women aboard including the driver, officials reported.

They said among the nine people injured was the signalwoman whose duties included lowering the railroad crossing barriers when a train approached. She was badly burned when flames form the blazing wreckage engulfed the signal house beside the tracks.

Candidates hunt more supporters

AP - With less than 24 hours remaining in the political primary season, the five major party candidates for governor moved across the state Sunday by automobile and helicopter to rally supporters.

None of the candidates offered any major new pronouncements, but according to their handlers, all five men were exposed to an enormous amount of food and a sizable number of potential voters.

In the Democratic race, former Gov. Michael S. Dukakis is challenging the incumbent, Gov. Edward J. King. Among the Republican, former Boston City Councilor John Sears is a widely acknowledged leader over Westwood businessman John Lakian and state Rep. Andrew Card of Holbrook.

Except for Sears the other four candidates were expected to converge on the South Shore town of Stoughton for a rally sponsored by the Save Our Stoughton Committee and opposing the opening of an adult book store there. Sears said he would be at a previously scheduled fund-raiser in Manchester.

Milford killer in critical condition

MILFORD,Mass. — A man who allegedly shot and killed his estranged wife and another man in his former neighborhood remained in critical but stable condition Sunday, under arrest on two counts of first degree murder, the police said.

Detective Patrolman Omar Recore said Sunday night that Joseph Allen, 38, of Hudson, remained under police guard at the University of Massachusetts Medical Center in Worcester.

Arraignment procedures were pending his recovery, Recore said.

Nursing supervisor Carol Eliadia said Allen was in the hospital's intensive care unit.

Saturday afternoon, authorities found him shot in the mouth but still alive in a bedroom of the Milford home of Hohn Vega, 35. Vega, riddled with bullets, was dead in a brown leather chair in the living room. Allen's estranged wife, Nancy, 33, lay dead a few feet away on the floor.

Correction

Today, the Collegian returns to our regular typeface, "Century," after a two—day hiatus last week. Due to a mechanical problem with our main typesetter, we were forced to print the paper in 'Universe" type last Thursday and Friday. The replacement parts arrived from the manufacturer over the weekend and we are able to resume publication in "Century" once again.

In addition, page one of last Friday's paper carried the date May 14, 1982. Obviously, last Friday was September 10, 1982. We apologize for the error.

Finally, we would like to correct an error made in our Back to School issue which was published last Tuesday. In a guide to local bars which appeared in the "UMass Living" section, it was inadvertently reported that Delano's restaurant in Amherst serves free pizza with beer. Delano's does not serve pizza. We also apologize for this error.

Even if you are content with the dorms, come down and meet us, you may change your mind about frats, specifically BKØ, as did many of us. There's no obligation and it only takes a short time. Don't narrow yourself down to one choice. Go to all of the rush parties to see which house is best suited to your needs. Candlelight on disputed death

By AMY JENESS
Collegian Staff

The Third World Women's Task force is sponsoring a vigil tonight to commemorate the fourth anniversary of the death of University of Massachusetts student Seta Rampersad.

The vigil will be held at 7 p.m. by the Campus Pond.

Rampersad, a senior political science major, was found dead September 13, 1978 at the Motel 6 in South Deerfield. Since that time, many people have questioned a state coroner's investigation concluding that Rampersad died of natural causes.

Spokesperson for the Third World Women's Task Force, Panna Putnam, said she hopes to get twenty-five or more people to participate in the vigil.

"It will be mostly a quiet candlelight vigil," Putnam said. "Perhaps we will have one person talk a little about the case or offer a prayer."

"I think it is very mysterious that anyone involved in a small way has sort of disappeared from the area. The people who were in the room with Seta are gone. The motel employees who dealt with the people Seta was with have been transferred. One of the first police officers to see Seta has been transferred and the owners of the Motel 6 have changed," Putnam said.

After an inquest by the Franklin County District Attorney's office, The Daily Hampshire Gazette reported on Feb. 3, 1979, that the newly-elected District Attorney Simons said he would not prosecute anyone for either drug charges or possible perjury in connection with the inquest testimony.

The District Attorney's office never made a serious attempt to investigate," said Putnam. I definitely think it was a cover-up from the way the evidence was destroyed. The motel room was wiped clean, there were no photos, no semen tests, no fingerprints."

The statute of limitations for the case expired last fall, legally closing the case. However, the case may be reopened up to seven years af fact.

"We are keeping the case alive even if it is legally closed," said Putnam.

"We can only hope for a miracle," she said, "that Carol Newton or Brian Pitzer will come forward and tell what really happened."

During an inquest shortly after Rampersad's death, District Attorney Callahan claimed three people had been with Rampersad the night she died. Demetrious Konstanlopulos (also known as Jimmy the Greek), owner of the Captain's Table restaurant where Rampersad worked, offered to give Rampersad a ride to her Amherst apartment. Also in the car were Brian Pitzer, a friend of Konstanlopulos and his date, Carol Newton.

After stopping for a drink, the four went to Motel 6 for a party. Callahan said the witnesses testified to smoking some marijuana and snorting some cocaine.

According to Konstanlopulos' testimony Rampersad started having siezures around 3 a.m. During the rest of the night Konstanlopulos said she had three or four more siezures.

Konstanlopulos testified he and Newton left the motel around 6 a.m. Pitzer said between 12 and 1 p.m. he called a friend who was a nurse at the Veterans Administration Hospital. His friend took Rampersad's vital signs and suggested Pitzer call an ambulance. Pitzer said at the inquest that Rampersad was alive when he left at 1 p.m. According to police, the ambulance arrrived at 1:10 p.m. and the medics pronounced Rampersad dead at 1:15 p.m.

New ombudsman Gadlin untwisting UM bureaucracy

By LAURIE FISHER
Collegian Staff

Students frustrated with the bureaucracy at the University of Massachusetts may turn to the new ombudsman, Howard Gadlin.

A professor of psychology at UMass for 13 years, Gadlin began his two-year term as ombudsman two weeks ago.

He replaces Janet Rifkin of the department of Legal Studies, whose term has since expired. Gadlin said he was pleased with his predecessor's track record and plans to continue projects already underway.

The Ombudsman office was created in 1971 in an effort to serve any undergraduate or graduate student, faculty, or staff member with a University-related problem.

Problems not being solved through normal channels can be taken to the Ombudsman's office located at the Campus Center in room 823. The staff can usually get needed information and aid in finding a solution.

"The program has a reasonably good reputation which we plan to uphold," Gadlin said. "We hope to participate in the final formulation of the Sexual Harassment Grievance Committee which was initiated in large part by Janet Rifkin. The necessary formal procedure provided by the committee will hopefully be enacted by the end of the semester," he said.

A search committee composed of students, staff, and faculty recommended Gadlin, who was officially appointed by Chancellor Loren Baritz. A native of New York City and a graduate of Queens College, Gadlin received a graduate degree from the University of Michigan.

Common problems dealt with by the ombudsman are grade disputes, housing mis-ups, favoritism in promotions, unreasonable work loads placed on teaching assistants or secretaries, Gadlin said.

"Alot of what we deal with is as a result of recent cutbacks and the overall economic situation. Secretaries complain of work overloads and students are more concerned with grades or jobs," Gadlin said.

Students do not feel as free to pursue studies which interest them. Instead they are taking courses which will be pertinent to their careers and are worried about the grades on their transcripts, Gadlin said.

These worries cause them to come to me," Gadlin said. "Students are far more serious than they were ten years ago. Because of this we are trying to clarify the methods for evaluating graduate students," Gadlin said.

"We are also trying to make all students more clear as to their teachers expectations regarding course requirements and grading policy," he said.

The Ombudsman's office is in a unique place that will see to difficulties in the large bureaucratic structure of UMass.

Break in 'human chain' of 15,000 ruins record, says Guiness publisher

KLAGENFURT, Austria (AP) — Tourism officials here kicked off the "Guinness Week of Records" on Sunday to try to topple or match a score of offbeat bests, but ran into trouble on the first try.

More than 15,000 people were brought in by bus and gathered in a circle, clasping hands, around Lake Faak on opening day for what organizers claimed was a new world record.

But Norris McWhirtler, publisher of the Guiness Book of World Records, said the feat will not be recognized because he noticed a gap in the circle of joined hands, the Austrian press agency said.

Organizers claimed that patrols of firefighters confirmed the "human chain" around the scenic lake was closed.

Mc.Whirtler, however, comforted organizers by saying the fact that so many people attempted to set a world record would be included in the record book.

The 1982 Guinness book says the longest human chain of any type was put together by 17,000 people in England last year. They were stretched out in a line, not a circle.

Newspapers said 40 record holders listed in the Guinness book were flown here to either demonstrate or improve their best marks.

The titles on the line include the marathon piano playing, belly dancing and "endurance kissing."

Leopold Wagner, governor of the southern Carinthia province, claimed a record of his own Sunday with the "shortest speech" ever delivered by a politician.

Citizens say taxes too high

BOSTON (AP) — Massachusetts residents say state and local taxes are too high and they complain that, in general, they don't get their money's worth for the taxes they do pay, according to a UMass-Boston survey released yestereaeeaut while they were unhappy with taxes and critical of staterun services such as transportation, a majority of those surveyed said they were satisfied with local services such as police and schools, said professor Franklin Patterson, who directed the survey for Center for Studies in Policy and The Public Interest at the University of Massachusetts Boston campus.

Overall, the survey found wealthy residents markedly dissatisfied with the tax burden and with the condition of the state's roads and mass transit facilities but relatively happy about police and education in the communities where they pay their property taxes.

The poll, the latest in a series by the center on public issues, involved telephone interviews with a sample of 500 adults in households in each of the 608 telephone exchanges in the state. Interviewing was carried out during a recent 19-day period.

A report on the survey, titled "Images: Taxes and Services in Massachusetts," noted that a similar survey taken this spring suggested that a bare majority of Massachusetts voters would not noa vote in favor of the tax-limiting Proposition 2¼, which passed in 1980.

Nevertheless, 78 percent of those surveyed in the new poll said they believed that Massachusetts residents pay more local property taxes than homeowners in other states. This view was most common among registered voters, families with ineome between $30,000 and $50,000, and residents of greater Boston.

Heartburn worth it at kielbasa festival

By PAUL BELVAL
HANNAH HOSOM
and CRIS SCHUSTER
Collegian Staff

Sweaty intense faces waited offstage to be presented under the bigtop. Within minutes, young men and women took their places on stage as the emcee introduced the song.

Ten-year-old Larry stamped a black boot in time to the polka beat and the dance started. Staring straight ahead, unsmiling, he put his arm around his little partner's waist, and the two skipped into the center to meet the other couples.

Red, white, and gold costumes swirled around the stage while the audience clapped to lively music. Small town faces in the crowd reflected pride in their ethnic heritage.

The Ninth Annual World Kielbasa Festival in Chicopee this past weekend presented a Western Massachusetts version of entertainment and heartburn, something most area students never take advantage of during their college years.

Governor Edward J. King turned out Sunday to proclaim it World Kielbasa Day and do some last minute campaigning before Tuesday's primary. After signing the proclamation, King wandered about the grounds, shaking hands with potential voters before waving goodbye as he left in a state police helicopter.

On Saturday, former governor Michael Dukakis was shaking hands and sampling kielbasa. Senator Edward Kennedy accompanied Dukakis. Grabbing a microphone and clearing the floor of dancers Kennedy addressed the crowd. Speaking a few words in polish he declared Poland would someday be free. Both Dukakis and Kennedy were sporting Solidarity buttons on their lapels.

The King Kielbasa, a 253 pound sausage, was the festival's main attraction. The Chicopee Provision Co. donated the world's largest kielbasa to the Chicopee school system.

Odors of Belgian waffles, Hungarian sausage, and English-style fish and chips competed with the greasy smoke from the kielbasa grills. Local service organizations manned the grills to earn money for various programs in the upcoming year. Other groups sold "Proud to be Polish" t-shirts, and "Kiss me, I'm Polish" pins, adding to the ethnic flavor.

Barkers yelled to passing groups, guaranteeting a "sure thing" to those who stopped to watch the games. However, reactions from those throwing balls through hoops trying to win stuffed E.T. dolls proved the barkers wrong.

Festivals like the kielbasa celebration are being held throughout Western Massachusetts this fall. They are worth looking into.

After all, heartburn can be fun.

Army Medal of Honor given 120 years late

CHESTERFIELD, Mass. — As more than 10,000 people gathered in front of this town's combination funeral home-post office, draped with red, white and blue bunting, two wounds dating from the Civil War were healed yesterday with a full military review of 2,500 marchers, including 21 Medal of Honor winners.

Army Lt. Gen. R. Pean Tice, deputy secretary of defense, left the reviewing stand he shared with four other generals, to re-present a Medal of Honor that Samuel Eddy won in the Civil War Battle of Sayler's Creek, Va., but that he received by mail, with no honors, in a paperbag 32 years after the war.

"Of course I remember him," Mrs. Towler whispered to the general as he knelt by her wheelchair to hand her the medal. Tice turned and saluted the other Medal of Honor winners in the grandstand.

Regiments of men in Union blue and Confederate grey who fought in Saturday's re-enactment of the 1865 Virginia battle, gave three cheers.

Raymond Newell, a Chesterfield hardware store owner and chairman of the weekend hurrah, and Tice returned the battle flag of the Savannah, Ga., Volunteers, captured by the Massachusetts forces at Saylers's Creek.

The flag was discovered several years ago in a Pittsfield attic.

Organizers believe that it may be the first time a Confederate battle flag has been formally returned to one of the states that broke with the Union.

"We accept our flag from a very honorabe unit to another honorable unit and former enemy, we hope former forever," said grey-clad Col. Henry J. Kennedy, commander of the Savannah Volunteers, a unit formed to participate in Civil War re-enactments.

Kennedy presented Tice with a scroll making "President Reagan, our commander-in-chief, and honorary member of the Savannah Volunteers."

The medal and flag were presented after the marchers from more than 100 military units moved through this tiny town of 1,000 people who were determined to put things right by their Civil War hero.

As the Hellcats Drum and Bugle Corps from West Point played "Ruffles and Flourishes," a battery of howitzers stationed in the Little League field boomed a 15-gun salute to Eddy.

The crowd cheered and applauded as the U.S. flag carried by Massachusetts "troops" in blue Civil War uniforms and the Savannah Volunteers carrying the Confederate flag presented the colors at the reviewing stand.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

DUKE vs. KING — THE WAR OF THE ROSES?

Should the call be heeded or not ?

"It's up to you not to heed the call-up." These words by the rock group The Clash were put into practice by over 500,000 young men as they refused the first peacetime registration since Vietnam.

The government began to clampdown on resisters this summer. Benjamin Sasway of California and Enter Eller of Virginia were convicted as was Russell Ford in Connecticut. These are the first three men to go to jail for non-compliance.

United States District Court Judge Gordon Thompson Jr., who presided over Sasway's trial, ruled that his motives for failure to register were irrelevant. Thompson also warned the jury not to give weight to Sasway's beliefs. This act by the judge has a certain logic since the government wishes to put a non-political face on the entire issue. But the silencing of the politics involved by the judge can not stop them from getting out.

Peacetime registration and or the draft are new additions to our 205 year old society. This intrusion by the government into the lives of it's citizens has been defended as necessary to protect "National" or "American Interests" and to protect a strong America from various Communist elements, godless degenerates, and other rifraf in the world who threaten the existence of the Republic. Is this really the case?

No it is not. If being drafted into the armed forces is serving the country, why is that the only way the country can be served? Instead of everybody being registered for the armed forces, why shouldn't people be inducted into a giant Civilian Conservation Corps. With being a fairly respectable thing to serve your country, America could profit as much by cleaner cities, lakes, better health care, etc., as it could by lopping off the heads of locals in another country because they do not happen to agree with our version of the good life.

Why this has never been seriously considered has a lot to do with the definition of American interests. Ever since World War II, but especially in the last ten years, American capital has flowed out of this country to the Third World. Industry after industry has set up shop manufacturing products formerly made in the United States. The wages are much lower, and to keep them that way, various right wing governments are installed, helped, or maintained by the United States. At the same time the agricultural and mineral resources are also colonized by multinationals. these two chains of events leave thousands out of work in this country, and damage the normal course of economic development for much of the Third World. Naturally numerous members of the host country take a dim view of all this and want to do something about it. It is to cope with this type of situation, a war for resources or to support a right wing government, that the registration and the draft become important. On another level, Russia and its millitary power also influenced our government and its decision to reimplement draft registration.

For years NATO has been numerically inferior to the Warsaw Pact, of which Russia is the dominent member. That is why we have nuclear missles in Europe. A major land war with the Soviet Union would almost certainly lead to some form of nuclear exchange. Neither side has the desire, nor the need to make that leap.

An example of preparing for war in the Third World is the Rapid Deployment Force. Vietnam showed us the need for large numbers of troops to deal with a guerrilla war. Much of the less developed world is strapped by huge debt burdens and less and less ability to stay independent of the powerful monetary interests who pull the strings on their finances. The United States people have no interest in maintaining this situation, which is both morally wrong and against much of what the country stands for. The rebels in El Salvador are not going to invade the United States. Cuba is not going to attack us. We as a people and a nation lose, not gain, from our control over so much of the rest of the world.

The three draft-resisters who went to jail are only the first. The government cannot possibly prosecute all non-registrants as well as those who moved and did not notify the authorities. But they will prosecute those who speak out as these three did. Registration is clearly only one step from the draft. Who knows the plans and why they were drawn up?

Mass. Society of Professors speaks on State Election

To the Editor:

Steven P. Barrett's letter (Dukakis — An Angry Look Back from a Local Resident, Sept. 8) contains several inaccuracies. I am writing to correct one of them.

It is true that the Massachusetts Teachers Association has endorsed Michael Dukakis for governor, but, the Massachusetts Society of Professors has endorsed no one. Instead, last fall and spring MSP invited the major gubernatorial candidates from both parties to address the university community on the issue of "The Role of Public Education in the Commonwealth." These candidates accepted our invitation and addressed the issue at hand, the one exception being Edward J. King who declined several offers to participate in this program.

At the completion of the program, MSP asked its members to choose among all candidates on the Democratic and Republican tickets. Nearly 200 members of the bargaining unit, or one-fifth of the membership, responded, and the results are as follows: Michael Dukakis — 75%; Edward King — 10% and John Lakian — 6%, undecided or other — 8%. The results might differ if the poll were taken today, but we have no way of knowing for sure. Time is too short and our resources too spare to permit repolling.

Those who did respond to the poll probably weighed the performance of Dukakis against that of Governor King. Mr. Barrett does not trouble himself with King's shortcomings. Or perhaps he forgets that in 1981 the governor line-vetoed the legislature's budget of $99 million for the Amherst campus and rolled back the figure to $97 million, which would have cost the campus nearly 100 positions; this year the governor proposed a campus budget of under $107 million, which he celebrated as an increase over fiscal 1982 but which promised to cause the layoff of 50 to 75 personnel. He also imposed rigid guidelines on contract negotiations in 1979-80, which held down salary increases and severely restricted benefits. And Governor King has steadfastly refused to implement the recommendations of the Ward Commission or take any other steps which would check the corruption that is responsible for the sorry state of public buildings and the outrageous condition of our own Library.

It should be recalled that Edward J. King's accession to the governorship coincided with recovery from the economic difficulties of 1974-75 when the unemployment rate exceeded 11% and the state deficit surpassed $600 million. The economy did not dictate the poor budget recommendations that issued from the Governor's Office in the late 1970's and early 1980's, nor did Proposition 2½. Such budgets were authored by a governor with a low regard for public education. It is inaccurate to imply, as some have done, that the campus is better off because of Governor King. The gains of the past few years stem partly from effective negotiating by MSP and partly from the support MSP and other university groups have managed to muster in the legislature. That should not be forgotten.

However one interprets the recent past, the important thing is to vote. I urge all members of the university community, whatever thier politics, to vote on September 14.

Bruce Laurie
President, Massachusetts Society of Professors

Down and Out on Moving In

I discovered how expensive moving can be both by experience and through a friend, who told me, "Moving can be very expensive." He told me this while helping me cart all my belongings through town on the back of my little red Maverick. I was beginning to panic that perhaps I lost a hundred dollars somewhere. No — it was safely in the till at K-Mart, the gas station, CVS and the sub shop.

Steve Masse

Maybe moving wouldn't have been such an ordeal if my new apartment hadn't been hit by a grease bomb. The bedroom walls were littered with stickers and smeary little rugrat fingerprints and crayon drawings. The floors were abominable (you could see where the furniture was, either by a lighter spot or by the rust stains left by spindly legs). All the kitchen blinds were thick with a malodorous sludge. And the kitchen! I was going to call up David Wallechinsky of The Book of Lists fame, to see if he would agree that my kitchen should top the list in the "You Think You Got It Bad" department. The freezer was so frozen up that the only thing there was room for was a small hot dog or ice cube right in the middle. It took two and a half days for all the ice to melt (all over the kitchen floor). The stove had its eyes crossed and its tongue hanging out. The sink was a cesspool. What makes it all the more astonishing is that there were no cockroaches.

I figured the hurricane of debris would be a snap to beat. All I needed was time, money, determination and Zayre's. Only then a sad realization destroyed my sense of complacency. Zayre's had fled town like a bandit in the night, never more to provide 25¢ salad bowls, your choice of three different egg beaters, Lestoil, Comet, shower curtains, pots and pans, motor oil and vinyl shoes. Last year Almy's bit the dust, and then Woolco followed (where else could you get a three piece sofa set for 300 bucks?). I suppose I wouldn't have been so downhearted by Zayre's demise if there had been the customary going out of business bash that lasted a month.

But I'm a practical sort of guy, and not one to spend too much time crying and banging my head on the boarded up doors of my favorite ex-department store. I stoically knuckled under to K-Mart, trying not to worry too much that in this Valley of Alternatives, I for once had no alternative. Trip after trip over a whole week (between scrubbing floors and mopping up melted freezer grunge), and I began to grow appreciative of my fluorescent light headaches. I mean, imagine if K-Mart also closed up? So what if I spent a couple of hundred dollars without even knowing it until it was gone.

Well, in spite of it all I'm pretty satisfied. My bedroom overlooks a great meadow with blue hills in the background — a great aid to my inspiration. It's so good to see things hopping again in town, to have buses running all day. There's a certain syrup in the atmoshpere of oncoming fall that makes you look forward to brain work and creativity. Through all the moving and rummaging, cleaning, shopping and of course going dotty trying to get a new schedule worked out while there are still plants to hang, something keeps you going, something that tells you it will all be worthwhile after all.

X's new album succeeds beyond punk commercialism

By PHILLIP PLANTE
Collegian Staff

Punk hardcores who've seen X in The Rise and Fall of Western Civilization (a movie about the Los Angeles punk culture) or have heard earlier X albums like Los Angeles or Wild Gift might be disenchanted by noticeable less wailing and brain-busting in Under the Midnight Sun. But Under the Midnight Sun is not a sellout but rather a confession of punk humanity.

Lead singer Exene Cervenka and songwriter/bass player John Doe openly flaunt their solid conventional marriage in Midnight Sun (likening themselves to mating wolves).

The Hungry wolf stares at villagers around the fire
She loves her mate as he loves her and they live together for life.

In the song "Because I Do" Doe and Cervenka confess...

I am the married kind
The kind that said I do
Forever searching for someone new.

The death of Exene's sister, Mary Cervenka, dominates much of the slower songs on the new album. Grieved sentimentality may not be appreciated by many of X's serious hardcore fans but it's refreshing to hear someone singing about honest human sentiment in a genre which seems preoccupied with Nazism and other forms of macho b.s. A Leadbelly tune is even thrown in for good measure.

All songs on the album are executed with the typically fine musicainship of drummer D.J. Bonebrake and guitarist Billy Zoom. The X sound still cruises with inflections of rockabilly and folk and the energy and drive of several songs on Midnight Sun are as racous and wide open as any of their older ones.

Punk music, with its insistence on change and appreciation for anarchy tried to be the cold slap society needed to break from old outdated ideas and mind-sapping decadence. Somewhere amidst this basic idea, black leather coat sales and money conscious genre rip-offs bastardized the energy and idealism of punk into wimp commercialism. In the same way Jello Biafra of the Dead Kennedys can tell Nazi punks to f--k off, maybe people can look past the commercialism to see what X is trying to say in Under the Midnight Sun, that punks are people too.

Gordon's Greats Live

By SCOTT MOSELEY
Collegian Correspondent

If you were fortunate enough to catch Robert Gordon at the Northeast area Quad Day show last spring, then you know about his rock n' roll genius.

If you missed him, fear not, because the intensity of his live show has been captured in his latest release, Too Fast to Live, Too Young to Die.

This album, a compilation of original studio tracks, remixes, and live recordings, form a collection of Gordon's greatest hits. His choice of material: oldies, rockabilly classis, and new songs, combine with his charasmatic "Presleyesque" delivery to form an album of non—stop rock'n'roll.

The spirit of the king indeed comes back to life is such songs as "Red Hot," "Sea Cruise," "Rock Billy Boogie," and "The Way I Walk," In one song recorded live at Boston's Paradise Theatre, Gordon rips through an incandescent version of "Black Slacks," aided by a top—notch band including Chris Spedding on guitar.

Side one concludes with the best version of Bruce Springsteen's "Fire" ever put down on vinyl.

A highlight of the second side is Gordon's version of Marshall Crenshaw's "Someday, Someway." The song was a hit in Boston for Gordon last summer and oddly enough, Crenshaw's weaker version became a mainstream hit this summer.

The spirit of Robert Gordon, rock'n'roll rebel, is captured in "Too Fast to Live, Too Young to Die," Gordon takes his only crack at songwriting on the record, producing an anthem for the fast-living, fast moving rock'n'roll life.

KING GEORGE STANDS HIGH OVER ONE OF HIS SERVANTS — Steinbrenner didn't look so big though when Dave Winfield hit him with a law suit and won an out of court settlement.

'Those damn Yankees'

By SCOTT HOOD
Collegian Correspondent

Way back last winter, while the winds blew and snow fell, when UMass students were recovering from finals and championship dreams were still dancing in the heads of the 49ers, George Steinbrenner was rebuilding his New York Yankees. But, contrary to past Yankee clubs, this new edition would feature speed and base stealing, not power and the longball, both trademarks of the team's proud and glorious history.

In order to have this transformation realized, Steinbrenner put Operation Fleetfoot in motion. Out the door went sluggers Reggie Jackson, Bob Watson, and Jim Spencer. In from the winter chill came Dave Collins and Ken Griffey, both well—known for their past basestealing accomplishments with the Cincinnati Reds. Steinbrenner, feeling like King of the Hill, announced he had assembled the greatest cast of players since his reign as Yankee owner began.

The scene is now a warm September morning. The Yankee fan opens the sports page and takes a peek at the American League East standings. The cold print seems to leap out and seize him. This is what he sees: N.Y. Yankees, 71 wins, 68 losses, 12 games behind division—leading Milwaukee.

What went wrong? Well, uh, several things. First, many of the so—called 'superstars", including Collins and Griffey, have performed like confused rookies than million dollar veterans. The team batting average is a dismal .254 and the expected track meet on the basepaths was cancelled due to slow feet.

That is only the beginning folks. The hard reality is this: Steinbrenner miscalculated and overestimated his personnel by a wide margin. As a result, he slipped into a state of paranoia unmatched by any other sports entrepreneur of the modern era. In 1982, King George has employed three managers (the first, Bob Lemon, was promised the managerial post for the entire year, win or lose), five pitching coaches (despite having the league's lowest team ERA), three batting instructors, and forty—three players. This is the same man who refused to release a statement a few weeks ago naming Lou Piniella as the new batting coach because he thought people would laugh. Compare that to the Red Sox, who have kept the same 25—man roster, manager, and coaches intact for the entire campaign.

Stability. It has been a key to the success of the Red Sox. It is non—existent in New York. Since the opening of spring training, there have been no fewer than seven first basemen, eight outfielders and four catchers. Rick Cerone, a catcher for his entire career, has appeared at third base in recent weeks under orders of King George. Fifteen players have performed for both the Yankees and its' top farm club, Columbus, this season. Dave LaRoche, impersonating a yo—yo, has made four round—trips.

Steinbrenner, a frequent criticizer of his players, has not been met with weak resistance. Several Yankees, including Tommy John (before being deported to the Angels), Rich Gossage, Graig Nettles, Griffey, and Collins, have expressed their not—so—nice opinions of their owner. It is estimated that nearly one—half of the roster has demanded to be traded, citing unpleasant working conditions as their main excuse.

On account of the team's poor showing, Steinbrenner has experimented with various ways of venting his frustration. Always notorious for the bizarre, George has accused the Angels of corking their bats and, after a doubleheader loss to Chicago, ordered an announcement over the PA system stating that ticket stubs could be traded for free tickets to selected future home games.

The fans have responded to this three—ring circus by staying away from the ballpark. Last week, a series with the Orioles drew crowds of 32,537 (Labor Day), 15,405 and 20,898. The Red Sox come in October 13, which could result in one of the lowest attended Yankee—Red Sox series in recent memory. Overall, the attendance is down 4,900 a game from a year ago.

That is the least of Steinbrenner's worries. The American League is investigating alleged non-payment of visitor shares by the Yankees and Dave Winfield, the team's best player, hit George with ah multi-million dollar suit claiming Steinbrenner backed down from his promised support for the Winfield Foundation, an organization devoted to aiding needy children. Steinbrenner settled out of court.

Steinbrenner has promised great changes for next year. The latest rumors have him spilling his wallet for free agents Steve Garvey and Floyd Bannister. Whatever tricks George pulls out of his hat, you can be rest assured that it will not be a boring winter for Yankee fans.

Start every day refreshed!

Bloom County

by Berke Breathed

Welcome Bloom County

Responding to many requests from our readers, the Collegian today begins publication of the popular comic strip, "Bloom County." Drawn by Berke Breathed, a recent graduate of the University of Texas, where the strip began in the campus newspaper. We hope you enjoy this newest addition to the pages of the Collegian.

On a related note, it was announced late last week that Garry Trudeau, author of the popular comic strip "Doonesbury" will take a leave of absence form producing the strip beginning January 2, 1983. According to the Universal Press Syndicate, the suppliers of "Doonesbury," Trudeau is expected to resume publication of the strip no later than the fall of 1984. UPS advises us they are making arrangements to "continue to appeal to your Doonesbury readers." We will pass these plans on to you when we know what they are. In the meantime, we would appreciate any suggestions you have about the comics page. Please send your ideas to Ed Levine, managing editor, Collegian, 113 Campus Center.

"I really thought the defense played well, I expected them to do well. They're good football players," said Pickett.

The fact of the matter was that with West Chester establishing virtually no ground game, Gaynor was forced to throw and the Minutemen defense responded.

The two times Gaynor tried to burn the UMass secondary deep All-American cornerback Dwayne Lopes came away with two acrobatic interceptions. ("Dwayne made the big players" — Pickett.)

A Bob Ross 21 yard field goal gave the Minutemen a 9—0 halftime lead and the way UMass was controlling the line of scrimmage, it was only a matter of time before Dean Pecevich and the Minutemen offense would see some results on the scoreboard.

In the third quarter, UMass put together a 16 play, 88 yard marathon of a drive that resulted in a 23 yard field goal by Ross. That drive lasted nearly nine minutes.

On their next possession, Pecevich (7 for 7 in the second half) engineered the finest drive of the day for UMass. It culminated when Pearson hurdled over the line from one yard out to pretty much put the game out of reach.

With a 19—3 lead and Pearson on the sidelines, Rich Jenkins took over at tailback and showed Pickett that he can play quality football himself. Jenkins led the Minutemen down to the West Chester goaline before taking it over himself to finish up the scoring.

The big question going into the opener was whether the UMass defense could hold against a fine thrower like Gaynor their first time out and establish a defensive unit capable of winning a Yankee conference championship. Pickett thinks they're on the way.

"There is a tradition at this school for good defensive teams and I don't see why this year would be any different," said Pickett, "True, these guys might not have the experience but they are good football players."

The Minutemen will be on the road the next three weeks, playing at Holy Cross next week then travelling to Harvard and URI the following weeks.

No sweat against West Chester, 25-3

Pearson and Murray shine under a hot sun

By BILLY SHEA
Collegian Staff

If you were a University of Massachusetts football fan at the season opener against West Chester State Saturday at Alumni Stadium you really couldn't ask for a better afternoon.

Not only did the Minutemen walk all over West Chester State to the tune of 25-3, they did it under beautiful (for the fans) 85 degree sunfilled skies in an atmosphere more common to the University of Southern California.

While the weather conditions were conclusive to pleasurable viewing, they weren't exactly perfect for playing a football game, but the Minutemen were ready.

"We had planned on using more people today anyway," said coach Bob Pickett, "so the weather really didn't bother us that much."

It certainly bothered the West Chester State defense, which spent almost three quarters of the game on the field. The UMass offensive line pushed and shoved the Golden Rams defense on their heals opening holes outside for tailback Garry Pearson and inside for fullback Tom Murray.

Pearson ran for a game high 147 yards, scored two touchdowns, and because the all-time all-purpose back in Massachusetts football history surpassing Tim Berra's (class of '74) record of 3467 yards.

PEARSON POPS THROUGH — Garry Pearson heads down field after breaking through the West Chester defensive line as Dean Pecevich (#7) and Scott LaFond (#62) look on.

Murray opened his senior season by picking up 102 yards on 17 carries, including several big gainers up the middle on key third down situations.

UMass jumped at their first scoring opportunity of the season. After Grady Fuller pounced on a Reggie Hines fumble on the West Chester State 30 yard line, Pearson and Murray bulled toward the West Chester goal behind Scott LaFond, Wilbur Jackson, and Gary Freker. Pearson capped off the drive by taking it over from 4 yards out giving the Minutemen a 6-0 lead.

The Minutemen immediately got another golden opportunity but this time failed to convert. On the very next series Todd Comeax recovered a Ron Gayner fumble on the West Chester 25 yard line. With Rich Jenkins and Murray doing most of the running, the Minutemen moved to the six yardline before Murray fumbled as he was upended at the goaline and the Golden Rams recovered.

While the Minutemen were marching up and down the field with ease, Gayner and his offensive unit just couldn't put anything together against the UMass defense.

Pats start season by dropping Colts 24-13

BALTIMORE (AP) — Ray Clayborn's 26-yard intereception return and Don Blackmon's fumble recovery on the Baltimore 21 Sunday set up touchdowns that gave New England a 24-13 National Football League victory.

Clayborn grabbed David Humm 's pass intended for Matt Bouza and ran 26 yards in the third quarter to set up one of two TD passes by quarterback Matt Cavanaugh -a 30- yard toss to Ken Toler.

Blackmon's recovery of Cleveland Franklin's fumble early in the fourth quarter set up Robert Weathers' 1-yard TD run that put the game out of reach for the Colts.

In the second quarter, running back Tony Collin gained 137 yards on 21 carries, caught a 15-yard TD pass from Cavanaugh, who completed 7 of 16 passes for 103 yards.

Collins, whose longest rush was a 54-yard run in the first quarter, also hauled in four passes for 56 yards, including a 33-yard toss.

His TD capped a 66-yard second-quarter scoring drive that tied the score at 10-10.

The Colts and New England traded first-quarter field goals before Baltimore went ahead 10-7 on a 1-yard TD run by rookie quarterback Mike Pagel.

The Colts took a momentary 13-10 lead in the third quarter on a 30-yard field goal by Mike Wood, who earlier missed a 37 yard attempt.

On the next series, Baltimore stopped the Patriots on the New England 19 and took over on their 36.

Netwomen lose opener to Vermont

By CHARISSE E. FEINERMAN

The University of Massachusetts women's tennis team lost to the University of Vermont on Saturday by a score of 5-4.

UM took the first and second singles matches, with Elizabeth Sullivan hitting 6-4, 2-6, 7-6 to win at number one and Chris Frazier took number two by a 6-2, 5-7, 6-2 score.

Patricia Sullivan lost third singles to UV's Ruth Burtman in two sets, 6-3, 6-2.

The netwomen regained some footing in their fourth singles match when Karen Orlowski won in straight sets 6-1, 7-5.

Fifth and sixth singles spots were won by Vermont's Meg Biglore and Susan Lewis, respectively.

UMass took first doubles against Vermont when Ariel Fowler and Laura Kaufmann defeated Holly Tompkins and Robin Colley with 6-4, 2-6, and 7-6. UM lost both second and third doubles places to a strong Vermont back-up.

"I expected it to be a close match," said head coach John Beal. The last two times that UM played against Vermont the Minutewomen won by yesterday's same close margin of 5-4. This shows that the Vermont squad is very similar to the Massachusetts' team.

"We are both in a very difficult situation. I can't fault the team for the mistakes that they made, because we really didn't have much time to practice," said Beal.

"I think that if we stay close to Vermont, then we will stay close to the top ten teams in New England," said Beal. From UM's past record against Vermont it seems that the Massachusetts squad will be able to stay close to the top ten.

The Netwomen have tough opponents in Rutgers and Harvard. UM meets with Rutgers on the 19th at home.

Candidates scan Mass. for votes

BOSTON (AP) — The long, bruising primary campaign for Massachusetts governor headed to the finish yesterday with Democrats Edward J. King and Michael S. Dukakis still trading punches and Republicans searching for votes across the state.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy and Frank Manning, head of the Massachusetts Association of Older Americans, campaigned with Dukakis at a Boston housing complex and the East Boston Senior Center, while King worked the crowds at the Faneuil Hall marketplace and then headed to Quincy for more stumping.

John Sears continued his quest for the Republican gubernatorial nomination with a whirlwind air tour of the state.

For more election news see page 3.

The other Republican contenders, John Lakian and Andrew Card, divided their time between campaign telephone banks and the field.

Warm, sunny weather was forecast for today, encouraging weather for a large turnout in a primary election that has been dominated by the bitter King-Dukakis rivalry.

King, in a primary upset, had turned Dukakis out of the governor's office four years ago, and only the candidates were predicting the winner today in a race generally viewed as too close to call.

Dukakis had Frank Manning in the flesh yesterday to counter a leaflet distributed in King's behalf over the weekend, quoting Manning as saying that Dukakis, as governor, had "turned his guns on medical services for the elderly."

"The leaflets neglect to mention that the comments by Manning were made six years ago," said a statement issued by the Dukakis campaign which called the King flyer "misleading."

"The truth is that Frank Manning...is an ardent supporter of Mike Dukakis and has campaigned vigorously for Dukakis for months."

UM hires staff despite hard times

By DIANE KADZIS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts has begun its academic year with the hiring of 18 new faculty members despite the economic uncertainty that set the tone for the 1982 budget appropriation for the state's system of public higher education, said Joyce Abel, director of academic affairs budget.

Abel said the increase in faculty was made possible by an excess in money allocated to fund the salaries of last year's faculty. Because the University was left with "money over and above" the level needed to satisfy the security of its employees, she said academic areas of high student demand were at least partially met.

Based on the degree of student demand for courses and priority in budgetary reviews, she said the departments affected by the expansion of the faculty are the Natural Sciences, the School of Engineering and the School of Business Administration.

As of Sept. 1, Abel said the departments of Computer Information and Sciences (COINS) and management gained 3 new faculty members; the department of chemical engineering added two new faculty members to its staff; the department of electrical and computer engineering added four new faculty members; and the departments of math, marketing, wood technology, acounting and hotel restaurant and travel administration hired one faculty member.

While the recent delegation of faculty members is advantageous to the University, Abel said it is not a progressive move but rather an effort to stabilize what has been lost over past years.

"We're not comfortable," she said, "we're just holding on. The University only has sufficient funds available to keep people across campus going."

Abel said this year's surplus of funds were funneled into the hiring of faculty instead of new programs because existing positions were left vacant due to the occurence of a high attrition rate during previous years.

Third World Womens coordinator: violence has decreased

By AMY JENNESS
Collegian Staff

Violence against Third World people has decreased in the University of Massachusetts area since 1978, said Third World Women's Program coordinator Panna Putnam at a candlelight vigil last night held in memory of UMass student, Seta Rampersad, 20, found dead four years ago.

"I think the incredible pressure by the community for an investigation about the Rampersad case and other incidents of violence against Third World people during '78 and '79 has increased awareness and the overt violence is going.

"Certainly there are injustices in many subtle ways towards Third World people but the rapes and assaults have declined. With the way things are going with inflation, assaults may go back up again, but we have to keep pressure on; that is why I think this vigil is important," said Putnam.

About 25 women, men and children participated in the silent hour-long vigil by the Campus Pond to remember Rampersad.

Putnam felt the service was successful. "It was a pretty powerful silence. Silence always is. It's good to know it's been four years and people still remember the case and care enough to come out to the vigil," she said.

Betsy Jelliffe, an intern with the Third World Women's Program and a political science/feminist studies major from Stanford University said, "It's hard being a white female. I feel like I couldn't say I understood or could not relate to Seta's case because I'm not a Third World woman."

"The University never took a strong stand on the Rampersad case. They did not bother to buy a $600 copy of the inquest for Seta's parents. They are working-class

Israel renews assaults on Syrian missiles

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli jets blasted Syrian and Palestinian military positions yesterday in east Lebanon's Bekaa Valley and Lebanese radio stations reported that 30 soldiers and guerrillas were killed.

The new Israeli air strikes heightened the possibility of a major confrontation between Israeli and Syrian soldiers in Lebanon. It was the fourth time in five days that Israeli warplanes carried out raids against the Syrians to retaliate for what Israel called Syrian violations of the Lebanese ceasefire.

The Monday strikes left several military emplacements afire, Lebanese radio stations reported. Israel said the attacks ended Monday afternoon and all planes returned safely.

Israel said the attacks were on Syrian missile batteries, Palestine Liberation Organization positions and rocket launchers.

State and privately owned Lebanese radio stations called the air assaults the heaviest mounted by Israel against the Syrians in the Bekaa since a cease-fire silenced their guns in east Lebanon on July 23.

It was the fourth time since Wednesday that Israeli planes attacked Syrian anti-aircraft positions at Dahr al-Baidar, about 20 miles east of Beirut.

All Lebanon radio stations said the attacks began at 7:30 a.m. (1:30 a.m EDT) and continued for eight hours. One leftist radio station warned a "new round of full-scale warfare" had begun.

In addition to the ground-to-air missile sites at Dahr al-Baidar, the broadcasts said Israel struck Syrian and Palestinian bases and concentrations of armor near the towns of Zahle, Tenayel, Saad Nayel and Tarshish.

The Israeli command said one SAM-9 missile launcher was destroyed in the latest air assaults and reaffirmed its determination not to allow the Syrians to station any anti-aircraft missiles in Lebanon. Israel says it destroyed six Soviet-made SAM-9 missile batteries in the same area over the past five days.

An estimated 25,000 Syrian troops are in eastern Lebanon and there also are PLO forces in the north and east despite the PLO evacuation from its Beirut strongholds. The Syrian troops moved into Lebanon to end the 1975-76 Lebanese civil war.

Damascus Radio quoted an unidentified Syrian military spokesman as saying Israel had "repeatedly violated the ceasefire and made a total of 227 sorties during which Syrian positions in Lebanon were bombed."

King kept away from rally after threat against his life

BOSTON (AP) — Police warned away Gov. Edward J. King from a political rally last night because of a possible threat against his life, King's press secretary said, but his election rival and other candidates appeared.

The Boston police warned King against appearing at a primary eve rally in Boston's Dorchester neghborhood because they "considered a serious situation threatening the governor's life could occur," said Gerald Morris, the press aide.

Morris said he was told by the governor's State Police detachment that the Boston Police had detained a person in connection with the situation.

However, Boston Police Deputy Superintendent Herbert Stone said he knew nothing about a suspect being detained.

Stone said the police had an unconfirmed report that there might be trouble but he declined to specify its nature.

Former Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, opposing King for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination in today's statewide primary, spoke at the rally as did at least two Republican candidates for governor and five Democratic candidates for lieutenant governor.

It was announced at the rally that King would not be present because of threats against him.

Morris said the governor missed the 7:30 p.m. rally and waited until about 8 p.m. before police cleared his departure for another rally in the West Roxbury section of the city.

Lt. George Tarantino confirmed that Deputy Police Superintendent Daniel Flynn relayed the warning to the governor's office but said he had no details concerning the threat or the detention.

Flynn was not immediately available for comment.

"They have extra police there at the rally and they notified the State Police," said Tarantino. "It's a big rally for any political candidate. Everybody running is invited.

Israeli charges are rejected by Pope John Paul II

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Yesterday the Vatican angrily rejected Israel's charges that the church kept silent about the Nazi massacre of Jews in World War II. The Israeli criticism was prompted by Pope John Paul II's decision to meet with PLO chief Yasser Arafat.

In an unusually tough statement, the Vatican called the Israeli accusation an "insult to the truth."

Representatives of international Jewish organizations, expressing the "deep shock of organized Jewry" about the papal audience scheduled for Wednesday, made a formal protest to the Vatican. Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization, sworn enemy of the Jewish state, does not recognize Israel's existence.

The Vatican note defended the record of the Roman Catholic Church in saving Jews during World War II and noted that Pope John Paul II has spoken out against the genocide on many occasions, including during a 1979 visit to the Nazi death camp at Auschwitz in his native Poland.

The statement was issued in reaction to remarks by a senior Israeli official in Jerusalem on Sunday, who said: "The same church that did not say a word about the massacre of Jews for six years in Europe and did not say much about the killing of Christians in Lebanon for seven years is ready to meet the man who perpetrated the crime in Lebanon and is bent on the destruction of Israel, which is the completion of the work done by the Nazis in Germany. If the pope is going to meet Arafat, it shows something about the moral standards (of the church)."

Israeli officials in Tel Aviv said Prime Minister Menachem Begin made the statement during Sunday's Cabinet meeting, and Israeli newspapers said the Cabinet agreed with Begin and released it to the press.

Officials in Tel Aviv declined initially to comment on yesterday's Vatican reply. One said there was no desire for a debate with the Vatican.

The Vatican statement said the accusation "contains words which are, more than surprising, nearly incredible" and deplored the personal attack on the pope.

It said the efforts by the church "to protect and save thousands and thousands of Jews, before and during World War II" have apparently been forgotten. "They are actions that should be well known and of which have been beneficiaries or witnesses many Jews who now live in Israel and (elsewhere) in the world."

The Vatican statement did not give any specific examples of the church's efforts to save Jews during the war.

Through the years the Vatican has sought to defend Pope Pius XII against charges that the church made few or only selected efforts to save European Jewry during World War II. Documents released from the Vatican archives have shown Vatican initiatives on behalf of Jews and other war victims and cooperation with Jewish agencies.

Former UMass student named new SCERA director

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Staff

The possibilities are unlimited for the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA), according to Joel Weissman, the newly appointed director of SCERA.

SCERA does research and organizing on issues of concern to students, with eight teams involved in various issues and projects.

"There are tremendous issues to be dealt with," Weissman said, "and SCERA can be a training ground to deal with those problems."

Weissman, a graduate of the University of Massachusetts Political Science department, will work with two other professional staff members and twenty-one student employees, as well as a number of volunteers and student interns.

"SCERA is a sort of laboratory for social change," Weissman said. "SCERA stands out as the largest and probably the most effective organization of its kind. It's dynamic, and it has tremendous potential."

Weissman said he plans to work primarily on outreach and organizational questions, and will work closely with the Public Policy, Academic Affairs and Residential Teams.

SCERA also includes an Anti-Racism Team, Rents and Fees Team, Women's Issues Team, a student support staff and a Resource Center.

SCERA will increase its outreach efforts to contact more students, and "launch a fairly sophisticated survey effort" this fall, said Weissman.

"We're looking to go much deeper into the University community than we have in the past," said Weissman.

Joel Weissman, newly appointed director of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy.

"SCERA has to develop mechanisms to get the pulse of students."

Weissman has extensive background in student issues and organizing, he said. He served as Student Coordinator for SCERA from 1979-1980, and worked as a temporary staff assistant this spring and summer. He was also Director of the Student Government Association's Communications Office and an intern in the Legal Services Office at UMass. Weissman has been involved with the Radical Student Union at UMass and the national Progressive Student Network.

Outside the University, Weissman led an unsuccessful effort this year to unionize Taco Villa, a Mexican restaurant in Amherst, and has been involved in strikes at the Amherst Nursing Home and Sterling Radiator in Westfield.

SCERA will work on a number of special projects this semester, Weissman said, along with regular work on numberous student issues. For example, the Academic Affairs Team will be examining academic counseling facilities and looking into the possibilities of peer counseling as a possible alternative or addition to the current faculty advisor counseling.

Sexual harassment is another issue of special concern. "We're on the verge of a breakthrough on the sexual harassment issue," Weissman said. A final sexual harassment procedure, long an issue at SCERA, will probably be released soon by the University, he said.

"There's always a severe problem around costs at the University, with escalating fees and declining financial aid," noted Weissman. In this area, the Rents and Fees Team conducts an annual "fee reveiw" of students fees scheduled for increases.

Dorms found for most students

By KEN LUNDBERG
Collegian Staff

For some students at the University of Massachusetts awaiting permanent, on campus housing, their makeshift living arrangements might consist of anything from converted study space to cleaned out weightrooms.

This "swing space" designed to cut some of the backed up housing need has brought the total of students without places to stay down from last week's estimate of 460 to about 100.

Of those homeless students some left UMass and have come back; stayed with friends off-campus or booked rooms in the Campus Center hotel. But roughly 100 students still remain not housed in any of the University's five main residence areas, Housing Assignment Coordinator Jerald Quarles said.

Most of these students now occupying "swing space" should be provided with regular dormitory room assignments within the next 2¼ weeks, Quarles said, stressing that his office for the past five years has routinely dealt with the expected "peak" overflow of housing problems.

Three students who moved into their "swing space" on last Friday on the ground floor of Leach dormitory in the Northeast Residence area agreed their converted study area was not the most luxurious but would have to do for the time.

One of the three students sharing the room, Bob White, 19 of Newton simply said, "Beats sleeping on the floor."

The traffic of other students in the dorm that normally sweeps along ground floors like White's didn't seem to aeeer, 21, a community resource assistant on the second floor said the study room, directly across from her the room. However, White did say the clanging maze of water pipes along the ceiling did keep he and his roomates fully awake early in the morning.

In the Brooks dormitory, a building completely renovated last year, the study rooms on each of the five floors has had their panels removed so that they could serve as "swing space."

Susan Ryder, 21, a community resource assistant on the second floor said the study room, directly across from her room, is "basically a room where people would like to stay." He said the converted study area that is without closet or phone like all "swing spaces' is frustrating for the transfer students now living there because they can't settle down.

"Better to have that than nothing though if you've travelled a long distance," Ryder said.

T'alent Coordinator says 'good turnout expected for concert

By PAUL BELVAL
Collegian Staff

Although this weekend's Jewish holiday and the lack of time between the start of school and the concert have hindered ticket sales for Friday night's Santana show, the Union Program Council's (UPC) talent coordinator said he exects a "good" turnout for the performance.

Only 2,200 of the 3,500 general admission tickets for the concert in the Curry Hicks Cage have been sold, but Bill Pritchett, talent coordinator for UPC, said the show will probably sell out.

"The chances are good for Santana selling out," Pritchett said.

Pritchett said the Jewish New Year holiday on Saturday has many students who would have otherwise bought tickets going home to be with their families.

He also said since tickets went on sale two days after the start of school, many students did not have enough advance warning to get money for the show.

Barry Claxton, UPC production manager, said the fact

Amherst polls open all day for voters at seven locations

By MICHAEL FOLEY
Collegian Staff

Polling booths at seven locations around Amherst opened today at 10 a.m. and will stay open until 8 p.m. as registered voters cast their ballots in the Republican and Democratic primaries.

Only voters registered in Amherst are eligible to vote here in the primaries today. Others must vote in the town in which they are registered. The deadline for receiving an absentee ballot was noon yesterday.

Precinct one residents, including Puffton Village, North Village, Gilreath Manor, Presidential, Riverside Park, Brandywine and Townhouse apartment complexes, can vote in the North Congregational Church on North Pleasant Street opposite Meadow Road.

East Amherst voters (precinct two) including residents of Butterfield dormitory, Village Park, Crestview and University Apartments must go to the North Fire Station on the corner of East Pleasant Street and Tilson Farm Road to vote.

Residents of all dorms in Northeast, Sylvan, Orchard Hill and Central residential areas, except Butterfield, (precinct three) can fill in their ballots at the Lutheran Church on Pleasant Street near the Meadow Parks School.

Precinct four and five residents, including Southwest residential area, the fraternity row, Amherst College, Crowpoint apartments and most of the center of town, can vote in the Bangs Community Center off Kellogg Avenue, near the Amherst Post Office.

Echo Hill, Rolling Green, Colonial Village, Swiss Village, University Park, and Southwood apartment complex residents (precinct six) can vote in the Fort River School on South East Street.

Residents of Brittany Manor, Southwood, Jeffery and Rivergiade Apartments(precinct 7) may cast their ballots at the Crocker Farms School on West Street.

South Amherst residents (precinct 8) including Hampshire College may vote in the Munson Memorial Library on the South Amherst Common near the white church.

Winners of the primary will appear on the regular election ballot on Nov. 2. To vote in the Nov. 2 election voters must be registered by Oct. 5. Arrangements for absentee ballots should be made with the Amherst Town Clerk a few days previous to the election.

Former legislator says gays targets

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Politicians in power will turn on homosexuals to divert attention from the economy and floundering social programs, says a gay activist who once was a Massachusetts legislator.

Homosexual men and women need to stand together to "fight the hysteria that's sweeping this country," Elaine Noble said in a speech Sunday at a meeting of Common Bond, a gay and lesbian organization.

"The Moral Majority is turning on Reagan and gays will be the scapegoats," Ms. Noble said.

Oklahoma recently enacted a law that states a school that hires an openly homosexual teacher can lose state funding, she said.

"Believe me, it can happen in New Mexico," said Ms. Noble, who served in the Massachusetts House of Representatives from 1974-78.

A campaign against homosexuals is akin to a witch hunt, reminiscent of the early days of Massachusetts, she said.

people and could not afford one," Putnam said.

"I think they did award Seta a degree posthumously, but basically, they did not become involved," said Putnam. "As for the Year Toward Civility, the University needs to look at the causes of racism instead of putting a Band-Aid on the symptoms."

The State Coroner maintained Rampersad died of natural causes but the Third World Women's Task Force disagreed with his report. But the case was closed last fall when the statute of limitations expired.

★concert

that the tickets are on a general admission basis has also slowed sales.

Since the seats for the performance are not reserved as they would be if the show were at the Fine Arts Center, students feel less of a need to buy tickets ahead of time, Claxton said.

"It's a general admission show, so there will be a lot of sales at the door," he said.

Pritchett said UPC has been trying to give UMass students the best chances at buying tickets by limiting off campus sales to Faces in Amherst. This has curbed sales to people who are not UMass students.

"We want to try and give the students priority," he said.

Besides Faces, tickes are being sold at the Fine Arts Center box office, For the Record and Union Records, Pritchett said.

Pritchett said he is optimistic the Jimmy Cliff and Peter Tosh concert on Sept. 23 in the Fine Arts Center will sellout based on yesterday's sales — the first day students could buy tickets.

B'nai B'rith Foundation of UM sponoring Jewish film series

The B'nai B'rith Hillel foundation of the University of Massachusetts is beginning its fall semester with a free presentation of the film, The Frisco Kid, starring Gene Wilder, at 7:30 tonight in Thompson 104.

This film is first in a series sponsored by the Hillel Foundation, which intends to show one a month for the duration of the semester. The film series is just one of the events Hillel makes available to all students in the Five-College area. The presentation of these films is principally done in order to provide entertainment. However, they definitely bear significance toward the Jewish community by introducing important cultural, political and emotional issues, said the administrative assistant for Hillel, Jamie Tessler.

Hillel also acts as a counseling and crisis center for all Jewish people, regardless of how strictly they follow the beliefs. Branches of Hillel may be found on other college campuses in the area, and many of the activities Hillel sponsors are instituted in conjunction with four of five affiliated Jewish organizations.

Murder arraignment from hospital bed

NEEDHAM (AP) — A 22-year-old Needham man pleaded innocent from his hospital bed yesterday in connection with a charge he fatally stabbed a 35-year-old woman who, said the police, stabbed him first.

Jeffrey J. Wills was arraigned in his room at Glover Memorial Hospital where he was admitted Sunday for treatment of an apparent knife wound.

Judge Maurice H. Richardson set no bail and continued the case until Sept. 23 at Dedham District Court in connection with the death of Constance Jacobsen of Needham.

Needham Police Chief Louis Roman said Mrs. Jacobsen apparently confronted an intruder who entered her house by removing a screen from a ground-level bedroom window between 11 p.m. and midnight Saturday. He said Mrs. Jacobsen struggled with the intruder and stabbed him with a knife.

Supermarket nixes talking registers

LEXINGTON (AP) — Cars talk, electronic games talk, so why not a supermarket cash register that reads the prices to customers?

That's what Stop & Shop Companies Inc. thought. But customers disagreed, and the New England chain has removed talking cash registers being tested at its Lexington store.

"Customers basically felt they were not necessary," said Stop & Shop spokeswoman Aileen Gorman from the chain's Quincy headquarters. "They didn't like the additional noise in the store and they particularly did not like the woman's monotone voice."

The voice is based on a "broadcast voice," from an unidentified woman with a Midwest accent, according to Linda Baker, public relations manager for the manufacturer, National Semiconductor of Santa Clara, Calif. The voice is tape recorded, then changed to a digital format and recorded on a microcomputer chip, Baker said.

"She wasn't a winner," Gorman said of the voice.

The voice reads out the price of items as the Universal Product Code on their label is scanned by the cash register. The price also appears on a digital readout on the register and on the customers' sales slips, Baker said.

"The basic reason was to offer consumers one more way of verifying price accuracy," Gorman said.

Reagan wants Congress to change the plea

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan asked Congress yesterday to bar defendants like the man who shot him, John W. Hinckley Jr., from pleading innocent by reason of insanity.

But Reagan shook his head "no" when asked if Hinckley's acquittal in June triggered the revival of an earlier administration attempt to restrict the insanity defense. If it had been law at the time, Hinckley could not have met the insanity test.

The administration proposal, which also contains provisions to make it harder to escape conviction because of tainted evidence or to appeal to federal courts after conviction in state courts, has practically no chance of passage this year.

Presidential counsellor Edwin Meese III conceded the legislation probably wouldn't even reach the floor in the current session of Congress. He denied it was timed simply to win favor in this campaign season.

In a brief statement to reporters, Reagan said the administration hopes to "simplify the justice system and make it more likely that those who commit crimes pay a price."

Associate Attorney General Rudolph W. Giuliani explained that the bill would limit the use of the insanity defense by redefining insanity to the extent that the government would have to prove only that the defendant had the knowledge and intent to commit a criminal act.

The insanity defense could still apply "in a situation where a person didn't know what they were doing, someone who had the mental age of a 2-year-old or believed that they were shooting at a tree when in fact they were shooting at a human being," Giuliani said. "It would not apply in all those situations where a person claimed they couldn't control their behavior, or they heard voices or they had some religious impulse to commit a crime."

He added that the redefinition would eliminate the vast majority of insanity pleas in federal criminal cases. Such cases are relatively rare, because most violent crimes are violations of state, rather than federal, law.

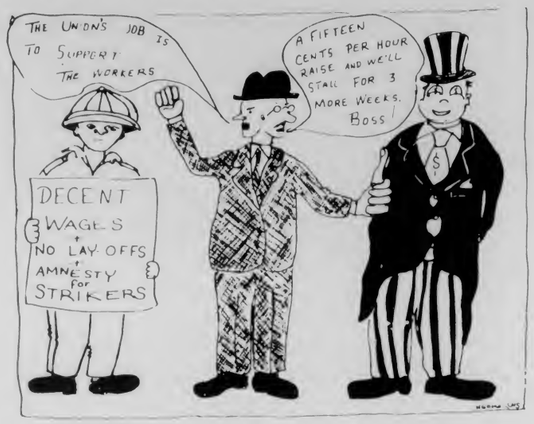
S. African trade unions struggle against racism

By BAYARD RUSTIN



South Africa is a divided country. Through a dehumanizing and degrading system of racial separatism and oppression, South Africa's white minority has sown the seeds of violence.

The unwillingness of the white South African leadership to implement significant reforms has helped strengthen the hand of anti-democratic left-wing opposition movements. For those who are committeed to the establishment of a non-racist and democratic South Africa, the growth in left-wing radicalism is as disturbing as the parallel growth of right-wing extremism within the white Afrikaner community.

Riots and protests — a product of South Africa's denial of basic human rights and democratic freedoms to the vast majority of its population — erupted with increasing frequency in the late seventies. Industrial unrest was on the upswing as South Africa's black workers began asserting their demands with greater self-confidence. Under the pressure of this upswing in protest the South African government passed labor reform legislation in 1979 guaranteeing black and other non-white workers the right to join and establish trade unions.

And while this reform has not eliminated an apartheid system under which black workers are horribly exploited and degraded, it has set into motion powerful forces which can eventually lead to a peaceful transformation of South Africa.

In recent years South Africa has been witness to a remarkable upsurge in the black trade union movement. Although the leaders of that movement are subjected to harassment, intimidation, arrest, and, sometimes, death, although dozens of trade unionists languish in jails and are subjected to torture and degradation, a number of trade union federations have emerged and shown substantial growth since 1979.

The largest of these unions is the Federation of South African Trade Unions (FOSATU). FOSATU's membership has climbed within the last year from 59,000 to 95,000. The Council of Unions of South Africa (CUSA) has likewise exhibited phenomenal growth and now includes 50,000 black workers in its membership.

In all, less than 200,000 of South Africa's black workers belong to trade unions. The organizing of a larger proportion of the black work force has been blocked through the South African government's repression of trade union leaders, through the impounding of union records and property, and through the disruption of union meetings.

Without question, the road ahead for South Africa's black workers is perilous and difficult. But the amazing progress they have made in recent years indicates that the movement has unlimited potential for becoming a principal factor in the toppling of racism and in the establishment of democracy.

Like Poland's workers, South Africa's black workers are motivated by a simple desire to live in dignity, to speak freely, to work in a healthy environment at a decent rate of pay, and to determine their own destinies. It is this democratic impulse which makes support for South Africa's black trade unions so essential to the promotion of human rights. It likewise, is, the reason why, in 1981, the Executive Council of the AFL-CIO adopted a "Program of Action in Support of Black Trade Unionists in South Africa." The program, which is raising funds from individual workers, international unions, and union locals, seeks to provide labor education for black South African trade unionists, to promote union organizing and recruitment, to establish a legal fund to defend arrested and harassed workers, and to provide black and multi racial unions with office equipment, typewriters, and duplicating machines.

Some voices in the United States and in the black community have argued that the best strategy toward South Africa is one of boycotts and disinvestment. But in the view of many respected advocates of democracy and human rights, such a policy would lead to the isolation of democratic elements within South Africa. As Franklin Thomas, president of the Ford foundation and a respected black leader, has argued, "Maximizing U.S. influence in South Africa requires both contact and actions and words that make our fundamental opposition to apartheid unmistakably clear."

Many South African black trade unionists agree. After all, they have made their most substantial progress in organizing workers in factories run by Western-based multi nationals. Such Western-based corporations are subject to pressures exerted by trade unions and human rights advocates within their own countries and are frequently less resistant to unionization.

In his recent speech to the members of the British Parliament in Westminster, President Reagan called for a worldwide crusade for democracy and freedom. If these words are to be more than empty rhetoric, they must be backed by significant American support for those organizations inside South Africa working for democratic change. And the cornerstone of any such democratic strategy must be the support of South Africa's young but growing black trade union movement. American trade unions, led by the AFL-CIO, are beginning to develop such concrete support. It remains to be seen whether they will be joined in this endeavour by other segments, both black and white, of the American community.

Woman claims mistaken identity

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A 48-year-old woman descended from an 18th century slave and a white planter testified yesterday against a Louisiana law that permits her to be classified as black because she has more than one-32nd "Negro blood."

Susie Guillory Phipps is one of six members of a Lake Charles area family suing to have the state Bureau of Vital Records change the racial classification on their birth certificates from black to white.

The state refused to do so under a 1970 law declaring that anyone with at least one-32nd "Negro blood" can be legally classified as black. The law was intended to reform an old Jim Crow statute that relied on "common report" in determining an infant's race, according to Mrs. Phipps' attorney, Brian Begue.

"I am white," the lightskinned woman with Caucasian features and straight black hair told a hearing officer in New Orleans district court.

Her suit mentions no harm that may have resulted from being classified as black.

Mrs. Phipps, who described herself as the darkest member of her family, said other relatives were reluctant to testify for fear the state would change the birth certificates of their blond haired, blue-eyed children from white to black.

Although the suit was brought under the name "Jane Doe," Mrs. Phipps gave her name in open court. News photographers took pictures of her.

Begue, argued that the very practice of assigning racial designation on birth certificates is unconstitutional, and that the one-32nd standard is an inaccurate test of racial makeup.

The case is being heard by Anthony Vesich, a court commissioner who will report to Civil District Judge Sanford Levy, who has been assigned to the case.

Begue said the matter was turned over to a hearing officer because of the volumes of evidence, including genealogical charts spanning seven generations and an extensive family photo record.

Begue said he would also present testimony from a retired Tulane University professor who would cite studies indicating most "whites" have one-20th Negro ancestry.

The attorney said the family approached him after one of its members applied for a copy of her birth certificate to obtain a passport and was shocked to find she was classified as black.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Kennedy assassination = cover-up conspiracy?

Today's first installment of a two-part series on the assassination of John F. Kennedy will describe what really happened on that infamous day, November 22, 1963. Tomorrow's installment will trace the Anti-Castro, CIA, and Mafia connections of Lee Harvey Oswald. Speculation and hypothesis will be the star witnesses in the trial of conspiracy in the deadliest degree.

It has been almost twenty years since President John F. Kennedy and the hopes of a nation were shattered by the sound of gunfire. According to the Warren Commission who initially investigated the shooting, one lone gunman fired three shots at the President from a sixth floor window of a Dallas book depository. Since that report was published, evidence discarded or unknown at the time of 'The Warren Commission' has painted a different picture of the fateful day's events. This is the story of a conspiracy.

Dave McCarthy

At 12:30 p.m., the President's motorcade was moving down Elm Street into Dealey Plaza, when four shots rang out over a total period of 7.91 seconds. According to acoustic experts, who studied an inadvertently made recording of the gunfire, the first and second and fourth shots came from the book depository, and the third shot came from the grassy knoll to the front-right of the motorcade. Because both shots from the book depository were within 1.66 seconds of each other, indications are that Oswald not only had one accomplice on the grassy knoll, but another one with him in the depository. Both of Oswald's accomplices were seen by bystanders, whose testimony at the time was either never elicited or taken seriously.

After the fatal gunfire ended, the Presidential limosine sped to Parkland Hospital, whereupon a struggle over control of the corpse occured. As Parkland doctors were about to examine the body, secret service agents moved in at gunpoint, and snatched the body. It was taken to Bethesda Naval Hospital where a careless autopsy was performed. No documentation of injuries, inspection of clothing, or preservation of evidence was made. Dr. Cyril Wecht of the American Academy of Forensic Sciences, who was the first civilian pathologist to examine the medical evidence, believes that the autopsy doctors were ordered not to do a complete examination of the brain. Coincidentally, pictures of the head were later disturbed from their place in a hospital safe. The unauthorized fingerprints found on the safe were that of CIA agent Regis Blahut. His excuse for touching the pictures — mere curiosity.

Further skulduggary on the part of governmental law enforcers include a letter from Oswald to the FBI which was destroyed before The Warren Commission could examine it, reversal of the head movement frames on the famous Zapruder film to show the President's head initially snapping forward instead of backward, the forgery of a picture showing Oswald with a rifle in his hand (five independent experts confirmed that Oswald's head was transposed on another body), and the disappearance of the slain president's chest photo, brain fragments and tissue smears from the hospital file.

These are the strange happenings which surround the death of our 35th president. Are the forementioned inconsistancies the work of incompetant government officials or calculating conspirators?

To help answer that question, tomorrow's installment will discuss the intelligence connections of Lee Harvey Oswald.

Our votes do more than elect

Like the seasonal changing of the leaves, election time and all those happenings which traditionally surround this carnival of sorts are upon us once again. By next November and the general election day, millions of promises will have been made, thousands of babies kissed, and endless hands shaken. Another tradition, though not as tried and true as those already mentioned, will also take place — as a group, the overwhelming majority of students (18-24) will not vote. Since the passage of the 26th Amendment in 1971, the voting group which has exercised its vote the least has been students.

Sociologists have attempted to grapple with this problem, but to no avail. Why it occurs, though, is much less important than its implications for students and their effectiveness in shaping public policy. Last year, for example, a large contingent of students descended on Washington, D.C. in hopes of persuading Congress not to further cut the already beleagured higher education appropriation. Realistically, why should any congressman or woman have taken seriously the empty threats hurled at them by the student protesters? Vote counts mean much more on election day than impassioned pleas or veiled threats. Any office holder realizes this and takes much more seriously the pleas of someone he knows will turn out to vote in November. In contrast to this, President Reagan last year, suggested that a cut in the Social Security program was necessary to carry out his new economic program. Immediately, senior citizens mobilized into one of the most well-organized, and out-right threatening lobbying efforts in recent history. Thousands of letters, telegrams and people decended on the capitol, intent upon keeping their levels of Social Security funding intact. The effort was a huge success with Congress, passing in both houses resolutions condemning Reagan's proposals as unfair and unacceptable. Congress acted this way out of pure political motivation. Each one knew that as a group, senior citizens turn out in larger numbers on election day than any other group.

John F. Hudson

Why then do students not vote? This generation of students is unique in that we have never experienced the fear of war, the stark reality of economic hardship, or the instability which so characterized this country's history up until the mid 1970's. We are mostly white, middle-class men and women, untouched by deprivation, unaffected by most events which occur daily in the world around us.

For the most part we are spoiled. Unlike the average citizen who has to drive on a pot-hole filled road, or is dependent on government disability checks, we are basically insulated from the real world and its problems and pitfalls. Consequently, we see no need to vote or are merely just too lazy to go through process of registration and the like. Luckily, there are still those few who make the commitment, who work for the candidate, and who believe that the system, though sometimes imperfect, works.

With the onslaught of budget cuts still in full swing, students can no longer afford to carelessly push aside their privilege to vote. In the final analysis they hurt both themselves and the University community as a whole by not casting a ballot. After all, voting booths are much more comfortable than unemployment lines.

Gnomon Copy Strike appeals to community for support

To the Editor:

Job opening at Gnomon Copy! This is at least what Gnomon Copy management would like to have us believe. However, if you talk to the workers picketing outside the Gnomon office, you'll find that these jobs belong to workers and students like yourself, some of whom have held their position for up to five years.

On Wednesday, September 8, 1982, workers at Gnomon Copy went out on strike after a unanimous vote. Working without a contract for over 11 months, with wages frozen for the past 20 months, workers are seeking a wage increase, safer working conditions, and the reimplementation of a previously held insurance program. With an oversupply of workers in this area because of the large student population, wages are low and working conditions can often be bad. Gnomon workers are fighting against this situation. It can only be done through the collective effort of workers in a union, the right to which is guaranteed every U.S. citizen. These workers need our help and support.

Please do not apply for someone else's job or take materials to be copied there. Don't cross the picket line. Scabs at Gnomon will hurt all of us. It could be your job next. Don't be a scab.

A mass picket will be held on Tuesday, September 14 at 3:00 at Gnomon to show the community's support for the striking workers. Please come.

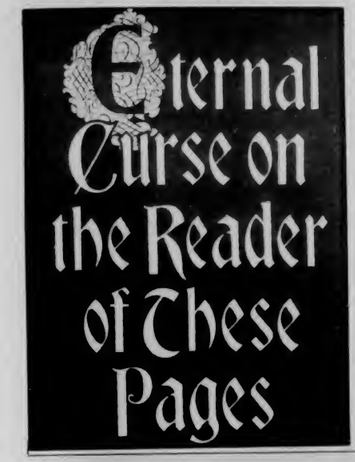
The curse of Puig's reality

ETERNAL CURSE ON THE READER OF THESE PAGES
By Manuel Puig
Random House, 232 pages, $13.50

By CHRISTINE MARINI
Collegian Staff

It is apparently a universal human flaw that brings us to be too easily impressed by the trappings of wealth and power, and too quick to judge a man by his profession and not by his character. In Eternal Curse on the Reader of These Pages, Manuel Puig reminds his readers of how incidental and marginally important such information is as he examines the conditions of modern life through the fluctuating relationship of two people.



The book consists solely of dialogues, real and imaginary, between two men, both of whom have something to hide. Ramirez, an aging, despairing hypochondriac from Argentina, hired Larry, an unemployed young North American, to push his wheelchair around New York City when Ramirez is well enough to leave his nursing home. It soon becomes clear, however, that these meetings are more than just outings for Ramirez, and more than just a job for Larry.

The two men talk, evading questions and skirting around the truth, both trying to keep the obvious hidden, yet they form a bond of sorts as they stroll through the dingy city. Questions pop up. Who is this stubborn old man, whose forgotten past as a political prisoner leaves him full of fear and paranoia? Why is Larry working for a nursing home when he is really a history professor who loves to teach?

The traps of modern life keep the two men slipping from role to role, unable to find a "self" that fits. Ramirez and Larry are both suffering from identity crises, using multiple personalities to hide insecurity, and able to talk only with those who don't really know them.

Even reality becomes unimportant, as Ramirez slips more and more often into half-dreamed fantasy encounters with Larry that take place in snowy places and involve tests of strength and loyalty. Puig pulls back the curtain of conventional morality, and sees people as free-floating beings full of pain and bewilderment, driven by forces beyond their control. The men use each other to try to redeem themselves, and ironically are torn apart not by their own "oddness", but by the invasion of reality, duty, and greed.

Eternal Curse on the Reader of These Pages is a fascinating and enigmatic piece of work. Puig's probe into modern life has brought up some interesting ideas about humanity that are too often forgotten in our superficial attachments to "success."

This novel was born of a crisis I went through. I had returned to New York from a trip, spiritually and morally exhausted. Within a few days I spotted this man, while I was working out in a gym. He was young, healthy, handsome. "I'd like to be like him," I thought. I got to know him and soon discovered that he was morally bankrupt. The book is the outcome of a series of interviews I did with him.

— Manuel Puig

Olympic hockey star says other car at fault

WAREHAM — Former Olympic hockey goalie Jim Craig testified yesterday that a Memorial Day weekend crash that killed a woman occurred after he tried to evade a car coming at him in the wrong lane.

Ingrid Olsen, the driver of that car, said earlier on the first day of Craig's trial for motor vehicle homicide that she saw headlights "in my travel lane" moments before the two-car collision.

Margaret F. Curry, 29, of New Bedford, a passenger in Miss Olsen's car, died in the crash on Route 6 in Mattapoisett shortly before midnight May 29.

Craig, the goalie on the U.S. Olympic hockey team that won the gold medal in 1980, testified that he was traveling west on Route 6 toward his Mattapoisett home when he saw the headlights of Miss Olsen's car about 100 to 110 yards in front of him.

He said he couldn't go off the road to the right because of woods, so he went into the eastbound lane. Miss Olsen, 30, of Westport, Mass., then returned her 1972 Toyota to her proper lane, the one Craig's 1982 BMW was in, he said.

If convicted of the misdemeanor, Craig faces a maximum of 2½ years in prison.

Mattapoisett Police Lt. James Santos testified that neither Miss Olsen nor Craig was drunk although both had the odor of alcohol on their breaths.

Insufficient evidence in Donovan Mob inquiry

NEW YORK — A special prosecutor said yesterday that a renewed inquiry had again found "insufficient credible evidence" to conclude that Labor Secretary Raymond Donovan associated with mobsters while he was a construction company executive.

Prosecutor Leon Silverman said he had investigated various reports, including allegations that Donovan had met with mobsters, funneled Teamsters union political contributions and been present when a kickback was offered.

But Silverman said, "I continue to be concerned by the number of allegations" about Donovan's ties to organized crime.

Donovan, in a brief statement from Washington, said, "It is tempting, and probably politically orthodox, for me to say how pleased and gratified I am that this entire matter can now be consigned to the historians.

"But, ... I am not pleased and I am not gratified," he said. "Angry that I've had to endure months and months of relentless press coverage of groundless charges made by nameless accusers. Angry that my wife and children have suffered as only a family can suffer. Angry that my former business associates have been unfairly maligned.

Gen. Westmoreland sues CBS for libel

WASHINGTON — Gen. William C. Westmoreland, claiming he was libeled by CBS in a documentary which said U.S. military leaders purposely underestimated enemy troop strength in Vietnam, sued the network for $120 million yesterday.

Digest

By the Associated Press

Westmoreland called the program, broadcast in January, "vicious, false, and contemptible."

But Van Gordon Sauter, president of CBS News, said "we stand by the broadcast," which he called "a valid journalistic broadcast about an important issue in the Vietnam war."

CBS will fight the suit "not only because we see this suit totally devoid of merit, but because it constitutes a serious threat to independent journalism in our society," Sauter said.

The suit was filed in federal court in Greenville, S.C., according to Dan Burt, Westmoreland's attorney. The retired four-star general, who headed the Army for four years in Vietnam, lives in South Carolina.

The action seeks $40 million in general damages and $80 million in punitive damages. The money will be donated to charity if he wins, Westmoreland said.

In the 90-minute documentary, "The Uncounted Enemy — A Vietnam Deception," the network said there was a conspiracy to falsify enemy troop strength to present a rosier picture of the war.

Atomic blast victims take governmentto court

SALT LAKE CITY — Hundreds of Americans who remember the blinding flashes of nuclear bomb tests are bringing their government to court today as they try to collect damages as residents of "a national sacrifice area."

A lawsuit by 1,192 alleged victims of nuclear fallout and their heirs claims that people living in southern Nevada, Utah and northern Arizona contracted cancer and other illnesses because of the federal government's above-ground tests.

The suit claims the government knew, or should have known, the hazards of the radiation in the giant mushroom clouds and failed to adequately warn and protect them.

U.S. District Judge Bruce Jenkins was to rule yesterday on a motion by the government to dismiss the claims. However, Jenkins has denied similar motions in the past and lawyers for both sides said they were prepared for the trial to begin Tuesday.

Above-ground testing of nuclear bombs began at the Nevada Test Site in 1951. They were stopped in 1962 after 100 announced tests. Since then, 372 announced tests have been conducted far underground at the same site and 10 others at other sites, according to the Department of Energy.

Boston disposal firm agrees to clean waste

BOSTON — SCA Disposal Services has agreed to clean up all hazardous waste at its landfill in Berkley, where chemicals have leaked into groundwater supplies, the attorney general's office announced yesterday.

The Boston company also must supply drinking water to residents living near the 16-acre landfill, which has been linked to the contamination of four private wells, said Stephen M. Leonard, chief of the AG's environmental protection division.

Leonard said tests must be conducted at the southeastern Massachusetts site before state officials can determine how much chemical waste has been illegally dumped at the solid waste landfill. He estimated the cleanup would cost in the "tens of thousands of dollars."

SCA, one of the largest waste disposal firms in the country, also must remove 100,000 drums of liquid chemicals from a landfill in Wilsonville, Ill. where residents recently won a five-year battle to force a shutdown and a multi-million dollar cleanup of an SCA dump.

SCA spokesman Joseph Boren said yesterday the Berkley cleanup would be a "relatively minor" project and "not in the same league" as the Wilsonville site.

The Episcopal Church updates arm policy vote

NEW ORLEANS — The Episcopal Church, in its strongest criticism ever of the arms buildup, called yesterday for an immediate nuclear freeze by the superpowers and a 50 percent reduction in their nuclear arsenals.

The denomination's governing convention also urged both the United States and the Soviet Union to embrace policies against any first-strike use of nuclear weapons.

The positions were approved after lengthy disecussion in the House of Bishops, concurring with earlier action in the other branch of the church's bicameral legislature, the lay-clergy House of Deputies.

On the ninth day of their 11-day convention, church representatives also approved a national church budget of $20.8 million a year, up 11 percent, but undercut funding hopes for a new program among the poor.

Chlorine gas explosion; residents evacuate

RESERVE, La. — A thundering explosion at a chemical company spread a thick cloud of green, deadly chlorine gas yesterday and forced the evacuation of about 3,500 people in this Mississippi River town, officials said.

There were no reports of injuries, but a civil defense spokeswoman said several ambulances were in the area and some people appeared to have inhaled toxic fumes.

The explosion followed a fire near a chlorine tank at the Jones Chemical Co., civil defense officials said.

"There was a massive, massive, rolling gray layer of clouds of smoke," Edith Vicknair of the parish's civil defense said of the fire.

"As soon as I got there, an explosion went off like fireworks — several times — and it went up and shot green, chartreuse green, about 50 feet into the air," she said. "I tell you, that's a poisonous looking son of a gun."

About half of the town's residents were evacuated from schools and residences, she said. Children were taken to a shelter at the Louisiana Power & Light Co. but none were reported hurt.

Ms. Vicknair said firefighters from surrounding areas were called and the fire appeared to be under control in less than an hour.

UAW rejects Chrysler offer threatens strike

HIGHLAND PARK, Mich. — The United Auto Workers union yesterday rejected Chrysler Corp.'s latest economic offer and threatened to strike unless agreement is reached by 12:01 a.m. tomorrow.

President Douglas Fraser said the union had turned down the company's offer, which did not include a wage increase or pension improvements. The offer did include a cost-of-living allowance based on profits.

"The ball is in the company's court," Fraser said.

The announcement was made at a union news conference at Chrysler's headquarters here. The company did not have a response immediately.

"I'm not saying how we'll strike but there'll be a strike," Fraser said. However, the union chief said that while "there's an enormous amount of work to do ... it's not insurmountable."

Fraser said that negotiation probably would continue around the clock right up to the deadline.

The current contract covers 43,200 U.S. autoworkers with another 40,000 on indefinite layoff.

Chrysler's proposal, presented Sunday, was for a two-year economic pact and a three-year pact covering non-economic items, Fraser said.

The UAW proposed a oneyear contract on economic terms and a two-or three-year agreement on non-economic items.

What's Open Rush?

A time to meet the brotherhood and see the house in an informal and non-committal atmosphere. We encourage all University men who are interested in fraternities or want more than just a degree for spending four years at UMass. Even if you are content with the dorms, come down and meet us, you may change your mind about frats, specificaly BKØ, as did many of us. There's no obligation and it only takes a short time. Don't narrow yourself down to one choice. Go to all of the rush parties to see which house is best suited to your needs. Ask questions about the living conditions, social activities, sports, reputations, food, etc. Ask upperclassmen on your floor to suggest a few houses to start looking at and their respective reputations.

Hixon is optimistic towards starting this year off against a top contender. Northwestern was in the area this past weekend and lost 2-1 to North Carolina, a team that UMass scrimmaged with last week and played evenly.

Northwestern is led by high scorer senior Nancy Fisher, who last year averaged a goal a game.

"They get a lot of their scoring from corners and our defense will be out to prevent this today," said Hixon. Hixon said that Northwestern is the type of team that is susceptable to fast breaks and UMass will try to take advantage of this weakness.

Hixon's game plan is to start off with the offensive punch from the first whistle on and she imagines that Northwestern will be playing a man-to-man defense. This season will give the players who were overshadowed offensively by Strong and Caples the opportunity to shine.

The heat could be a detriment to the players, but sun worshippers will have an opportunity to sunbathe while cheering on the stickwomen from the upper NOPE hill.

Sox lose

BOSTON (AP) — Converted reliever Ed Whitson whipped Boston for the second time within a week as the Cleveland Indians defeated the Red Sox and rookie Dennis Boyd in his major league debut 3-1 Monday night in the first half of a doubleheader.

Whitson, 4-2, shut out the Red Sox in Cleveland last Wednesday in a route-going performance. However, he needed relief help from Dan Spillner in the final two innings to make it two in a row over Boston, which scored with two outs in the ninth on Rick Miller's RBI single.

Boyd, promoted from Bristol of the Eastern League Sept. 1 after posting a 14-8 record with a 2.85 earned run average in AA ball this season, was tagged for seven hits and two runs in 51-3 innings.

The Indians picked up a run in the first on Toby Harrah's two-out double to left and Mike Hargrove's single.

Cleveland made it 2-0 in the fourth on a single by Andre Thornton, an infield out and a two-out single by Rick Manning.

The Indians added a run in the eighth off Tom Burgmeier on a walk to Thornton, a sacrifice and a single by Manning. Thornton was thrown out at the plate by left fielder Jim Rice, but third base umpire George Maloney ruled that Boston third baseman Carney Lansford had interfered with the runner, nullifying the apparent putout and allowing the run to score.

Whitson, complaining of a sore knee, then gave way to Spillner, who earned his 18th save.

Gettler's troops take on Bridge port at Boyden

By CHARISSE FEINERMAN
Collegian Staff

It will be very important for the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team to play this afternoon's season opener against the University of Bridgeport slightly more conservatively than might be expected. Since Thursday's scrimmage with Amherst College, the University team may lack some of the depth that it had, due to player injuries.

Luckily, not all of the injured squad members will be confined to the bench for the season. Lenn Margolis and Mike Gibbons will probably be able to participate in today's game if UMass coach Jeff Gettler sees fit. Unfortunately, injuries sustained by Steven Berlin were slightly more serious and may keep him on the bench for a more prolonged period of time.

"We don't have a lot of depth...It'll be a more conservative game," said Gettler. The back-ups are inexperienced and need work, so Gettler isn't going to over commit his team to anything that they can't handle.

Peter Vasiliadis dribbles the soccer ball past an Amherst College defender during last week's scrimmage against Amherst. The Minutemen open their regular season today against the University of Bridgeport on Boyden Field at 3 p.m.

In preparation for today's game, the booters have worked especially hard on set plays, namely restarts. Restarts occur anytime the ball is stopped and either corner kicks, goal kicks, direct or indirect free kicks, penalty kicks, and throw-ins. The team will have set plays for each of these restarts, in an attempt to look for extra goals. Coach Gettler is working the team extra hard on the restarts, as a result of a study that had been done that states that 60 percent of goals that are scored are scored off of restarts. This is Gettler's attempt at saving and possibly earning his team a few extra goals.

Freshmen who are going to be playing varsity this season are; Tom Ushok, Eon John, Mike Belline, Chris Gift, and Mark Jeffrey. Seniors on the team who will be trying to improve on last season's record of 5-10-1 are Mike Mahoney and Mike Gibbons. In addition to a new coach, the team also has a new captain, junior Kevin Flynn.

Playing in the middle positions for the UM squad are sweeper Michael Runacre and stopper Lenn Margolis. "There is an old axiom that says you should have your strength up the middle, and they (Runacre and Margolis) are up the middle", said Gettler.

Jeff Smith, who started for the junior varsity squad last season, will be an integral part of the varsity team this season. "Smith will be the key to the season," said Gettler.

"Bridgeport has the best team that it has had for the last eight years," said Gettler. The University of Bridgeport has two English freshmen in the positions of striker and sweeperback. Another asset to the Bridgeport squad will be Benedict Wisseh, a junior from Libya, who is one of the top forwards in New England. Last season the UM team lost to Bridgeport 3-2 in overtime.

"I don't know how we will do, but I think that we can win," said Gettler.

For those who enjoyed last season's game, this season should be even more enjoyable. For thoses who have never been to a UMass soccer game, it is advisable to get to Boydon varsity field just a few minutes before 3:00 in case the hill fills up early.

...while Hixon's host Northwestern at NOPE

By JENNIFER KUPPER
Collegian Correspondent

On the eve of the University of Massachusetts opening field hockey game, Pam Hixon's final words to her team still echoed on the practice field long after the women descended to the showers.

"...We are the better team, we are competent. I KNOW we are the better team," Hixon said with conviction.

Hixon enters her fifth season as head coach of the Minutewomen today against Northwestern University of Chicago, at the NOPE upper field at 3:30 p.m.

The team is one in transition and has worked very hard this preseason, according to Hixon. The women must compensate for the loss of superstars Judy Strong and Sue Caples. Nevertheless, this year's team appears to be strong and capable. Their work is cut out for them, though, to replace the scoring punch of Strong and Caples.

Unlike years past, the team will play with a four man forward line. Hixon feels this will add to the strength and sureness needed for scoring power, since as of yet no single person has emerged as a dominate scorer.

"We hope to get a lot of the goals from the corners," Hixon said, "they (the forwards) all have the ability to score."

Sharing the responsibilities on the forward line will be Pam Moryl, Tish Stevens, Patti Smith, Alison Rioux, Tina Coffin, and sisters Diane and Sandi Kobel.

Seeing action in midfield this season will be Judy Morgan (back after missing last season with a knee injury), Caroline Kavanaugh, Sue Packard, and freshman Megan Donnelly.

Anchoring the defense is two year varsity veteran Patty Shea in goal, who is said to be the "best goalie in New England." In front of Shea, Chris Coughlin will be a sweeper (also back after missing last season). Rounding out the backfield will be Ro Tudryn, Carol Progulske and Nancy Goode.

Although the team was in good shape when it returned for practice, it has unfortunately begun to thin out due to injury. Andrea Muccini will be out approximately six weeks after having a tooth knocked out in preseaon. Freshman Chris Kocot will also be out while she is recovering from a stress fracture in her lower leg. Kocot should be back in a few weeks.

Today's game will be a fine opeing challenge as Northwestern and UMass were both nationally ranked teams last season.

Dukakis and Sears victorious

King backs Dukakis

BOSTON (AP) — Fresh from victory in a bitter primary fight, former Gov. Michael S. Dukakis sought peace within the Democratic party last night by asking for help from supporters of the defeated Gov. Edward J. King.

An hour later King said he would endorse his opponent.

"This was another defeat for Reaganomics," Dukakis said in claiming victory three hours after the polls closed, "and for the policies of the Reagan administration. I hope it's a message not just across this state but across the nation because there are other states like us that are hurting as much if not more."

"Our hearts go out to Jody and Ed King because Kitty and I know what it is like to pour your heart and soul into the governorship . . . and then to lose in a primary," Dukakis added about the Kings and his own wife.

"We share their pain because we experienced it and want to extend our best wishes."

In his victory speech before several thousand cheering supporters in the ballroom of his hotel headquarters, Dukakis invited King's supporters to back him in his November bid for the governor's seat.

"We welcome them into this effort," said Dukakis. "We share many of the same goals and values. I want them to know we want them to be a part of our coalition. . . for a strong, vigorous and successful November election.

Dukakis, who called his victory "a second chance," referred to his 1978 primary loss to King.

His mention of King drew lusty boos in the ballroom from his supporters, but as Dukakis continued to speak, the boos turned to cheers.

Landslide in Amherst

In an outcome that could help define the course of Massachusetts' Democratic party in years to come, Michael S. Dukakis last night defeated Governor Edward J. King in Amherst's gubernatorial primary election.

Of the 3,975 voters registered in the town of Amherst who cast their ballots at the eight precincts, Dukakis received 3,544 votes to overcome King by 3,113 votes, ending the state's most devisive primary race.

On the Republican gubernatorial ballot, Amherst's electorate voted John W. Sears as the candidate who will confront Dukakis in the November election. Sears, securing 189 votes, defeated Andrew H. Card who received 115 votes and John R. Lakian who gained 94 votes.

The result of the Democrat's five-way race for the office of lieutenant governor ended in a local victory for Evelyn Murphy who secured a substantial 1,589 votes. Murphy confronted Democrats Lois G. Pines, who received 603 district votes; John F. Kerry, who received 562 votes; Lou Nickinello, who acquired 176 Amherst votes; and Samuel Rotondi, who gathered 208 town votes.

Murphy will face Republican Leon J. Lombardi, an unopposed candidate in last night's primary, this coming November.

Mary L. Wentworth, write-in candidate on the Democratic ballot for the position of representative in Congress in the first Congressional district, overwhelmingly defeated Republican Silvio O. Conte, who was also running as a write-in Democratic candidate, with a district total of 975 votes. Conte also ran as an unopposed Republican for the same office. On his own party's ticket, Conte received 360 votes.

For the office of governor's councillor, Democrats Edward M. O'Brien and Charles F. McCarthy battled it out unopposed by a Republican. O'Brien gained victory with a regional vote of 1,315, while McCarthy finished with a total of 682 from town residents.

Stanley J. Kozera defeated his Democratic opponent Sean E. O'Leary for Hampshire county's register of deeds. Kozera pulled through the primary with a count of 1,304 votes. O'Leary lagged behind with a close final 1,022 votes. The Republican party had a vacant slot for this position.

Departments say new UM staff not enough

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

The newly hired members of the University of Massachusetts faculty will only serve to bring their major's curriculum nearer to its minimum level of undergraduate training, according to many departments, allowing for little expansion.

"We're running harder and harder to stand still," said Professor Parker Worthington, chairman of the Marketing Department, which received one of the 18 new faculty member positions opened this summer despite reductions in other areas of the UMass budget.

"Sometimes courses were not given due to lack of faculty," said Nigar Khan, administrative officer of the Electrical and Computer Engineering (ECE) department, which hired five new staff members. Khan said three of the hirees were filling vacated positions, while the additional two are needed for the ECE department to keep pace in its "constantly expanding" field, mostly through graduate level course additions.

Dr. John Eldridge, chairman of the Chemical Engineering department, said their two new faculty members will fill "needs that have been met in the past," but that have subsequently experienced "very substantial growth." He said the professor will help provide access to ordinarily oversubscribed courses and enable added courses on the graduate level.

Chairman Richard Asebrook said much of the overcrowding in the Accounting department is due to the areound 20 other departments outside the School of Business Administration (SBA) which "if not requiring, are strongly suggesting" that their students take accounting courses.

"You don't have to be an accountant, but you have to be able to talk to an accountant," Asebrook said, very few sections are not filled over capacity, with some waiting lists having more students than the number of those actually in the course.

While understaffing has meant waiting lists and crowded classrooms for many, it has forced some majors to graduate students with less of an education than desired.

"Unfortunatly, we've had to do that," said Dr. William Rice, chairman of the Wood Technology Program, which returned to a four professor staff after five years with three. "Many (students) have gone out without the wood chemistry background of wood technology," Rice said of one of the previously abandoned areas required "to make our program meet the needs of the commonwealth" which can now be met with the new professor.

Parker, however, claiming such problems to be "just the opposite" in the SBA, said money is only part of package of incentives needed to attract quality professors in a "seller's market." As part of a school "drowning in students," though, Parker said the Marketing department is constantly looking for new faculty members, and feels "very, very good" about the new addition.

Lebanese president killed, eight others die in Beirut blast

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — President-elect Bashir Gemayel was killed yesterday in a bomb blast that shattered his Christian Phalange Party headquarters in east Beruit.

Earlier reports had said Gemayel survived, but eight of his party members perished and at least 50 others were wounded.

The sources said Gemavel's body was found in the rubble of the building on Saissine Square a few hours after the explosion at 4 p.m. (10 pa.m. EDT). It occured as the 34-year-old president-elect prepared to address a rally of 400 of his followers.

The Phalange Party's radio station had reported earlier that Gemayel survived unscratched and walked away from the rubble. It said cheers went up from a crowd in the Chritian neighborhood, church bells rang and Phalangist militiamen fired their guns to celebrate the report that Gemayel had survived. It even attributed a quote to the president-elect, reporting he said, "I'm safe. Thank God this incident is past."

The radio station went off the air several hours later as reports raced through the war-ravcaged city that the president elect was dead.

Lebanon s state radio made no announcement, but a few minutes after 11 p.m. (5 p.m. EDT) it began playing solemn, classical music.

His death appeared certain to bring a new wave of bloody fighting between Lebanon's right-wing Christians and Moslem leftists. It also threatened the delicate links Israel has created with the Lebanese Christian militias following the 1975-76 civil war between the Christians and an alliance of Moslems and Palestinian guerillas.

No group asserted responsibility for the bombing. Munitions experts said an estimated 400 pounds of explosives were used for the device.

Israel invaded Lebanon June 6, forcing the Palestine Liberation organization guerillas to be evacuated from their stronghold in Moslem west Beirut, and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin had been pressing Gemayel to formally recognize the Jewish state.

Gemayel was elected president on Aug. 23 by Parliament in a special session that was boycotted by a number of Moslem legislators. He was to take office Sept. 23

He has survived two other attempts on his life in the bloody conflicts here that pitted not only the Moslems against the Christians but also involved fights between different factions.

The explosion ripped down a third of the building that housed the neighborhood Phalange Party headquarters.

UAW may strike

HIGHLAND PARK, Mich. (AP) — A midnight strike deadline hung over negotiations between Chrysler Corp. and the United Auto Workers (UAW) as bargainers sought agreement yesterday on a new contract for 43,200 employees.

Meanwhile, negotiators for the UAW and General Motors of Canada Ltd. reached a tentative agreement on a new contract about 12 hours before the current pact for some 33,000 workers expired at midnight.

Contract talks were continuing last night between the UAW and General Dynamics Corp. of St. Louis, the nation's largest defense contractor. A contract covering 5,200 former Chrysler Defense subsidiary employees also expired at midnight.

Mass PIRG campaigns for bottle law support

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

As part of their strategy to prevent the bottle law from being overturned, Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) Chapters and community members around the state took advantage of yesterday's elections to leaflet the polls with information about the bottle law and encourage people to vote on the upcoming November referendum.

Lisa DeCarolis, chairwoman of MasPIRG at the University of Massachusetts, said, "It was a great opportunity to reach over a million voters in Massachusetts and give them the facts concerning the bottle law and why it is so important for it not to be overturned."

"By having community members and students hand out leaflets it was also a chance to show the bottling industry that we are together on this and that there is community support for the law," DeCarolis said.

The bottle bill became law last November when the House and Senate overrode the Governor's veto that has killed the bottle bill in the previous years. But the bottling industry is trying to have the law repealed by putting a referendum question on the Nov. 2 ballot. If the bottling industry succeeds in getting a majority of the vote then the law will be overturned, but if they fail to get 50 percent of the vote then the bottle law will go into effect this January.

The bottle law is a five cent deposit on all bottles, cans and plastic bottles. "The idea with the law is to encourage everyone to return their aluminum cans and bottles to the store so they can be recycled," DeCarolis said.

The bottle bill is question #4 on the referndum ballot. A yes vote, is a vote to keep the bottle law. Massachusetts is one of the few states in the region that does not currently have the law in effect, whereas New York, Connecticut, Vermont and Maine all do.

"But Massachusetts is a key state that would force New Hampshire and Rhode Island to have the law passed that would put pressure on many other states nationwide to also have the bottle bill passed," said DeCarolis.

MassPIRG is a student run organization working with a professional staff of researchers, lobbyists and organizers to promote the public interest in consumer and environmental issues. UMassPIRG project groups include a consumer advisory service, recycling project and energy and hazardous waste projects. The main issue for the fall is the bottle bill.

Other upcoming MassPIRG projects are a statewide bike-a-thon on Columbus Day weekend, a clean-a-thon and community leafleting, designed to raise money and encourage people to vote for the law on Nov. 2. There will be a general MassPIRG meeting at 7:00 p.m. on Tuesday, Sept. 28 in the Campus Center, room 163.

Speaker says color barriers hurting women's movement

By CRIS SCHUSTER
Collegian Staff

The barriers that exist between white, middle class women and minority women must be eliminated for the good of the entire women's movement, said Bettina Aptheker during her lecture at the University of Massachusetts last night.

Aptheker, the coordinator of the Women's Studies program at the University of California at Santa Cruz, spoke to an audience of about 175 people on "Controlling the Politics of Privilege: Issues of Race and Class in the Women's Movement."

"The choice white women face is not a question of getting colored women into the liberation movement," she said. "White women must begin to have a clearer understanding of the policies of privilege. White women do have privileges in this society especially in respect to women of color."

"The problem is we live in a profoundly racist and classist society. Only when we are willing to take the risk and make a mistake will we learn to undo racism," Aptheker said.

It is necessary to pay attention to the experience and knowledge of the world from the diversity of the experiences of colored women, she said. A different order of politics must be created and privileges of white middle class women must be sacrificed in order to break down the barriers between the classes and races of women, Aptheker said.

"I'm not singling out the women's movement. I'm focusing on the women's movement because that's what I care about," she said.

"Women are taught in their society to please, to accomodate, and to avoid conflict. But the fear of saying the wrong thing has forced women to retreat into silence. Women are forced into a bind. The only way out is communication, and that means equality between women," Aptheker said.

Society must be changed, she said. Relationships between white women and women of color must be developed.

"But it is not possible to form relationships in a social vacuum," she said.

"Acknowledging the barriers means taking risks, needing courage, and leaving a certain safety. White middle class men will come down on us. We're not supposed to be lesbians and we're not supposed to bond with colored women," Aptheker said.

The unity between men and women depends upon the assumption of equality between men and women," Aptheker said.

The unity between men and women depends upon the assumption of equality between men and women, she said. The burden of this assumption is on the man. Women receive their privileges as long as they behave because of this assumption.

By establishing an equal relationship between white women and colored women, better and more stable relationships can develop, she said. However, establishing this relationship "may mean losing status in life in exchange for other values we define and claim for ourselves," she said.

Aid cuts, recruitment cited in low minority enrollment

By JEFF ROSENBERG
Collegian Staff

The number of minority students entering the University of Massachusetts this fall has decreased and while admissions officials blame competition from private colleges, others say the University is not actively looking for minorities.

Juan P. Caban, associate director of admissions for minority students, said the number of minorities entering the University as freshmen fell 3.7 percent this fall, down to 115.

"Percentage-wise, a school like Amherst college gets a greater percentage of minority students for a school their size than does UMass," Caban said.

He said financial aid cuts and increased aid being offered by private colleges have increased competition among minority students and resulted in the "very moderate" number of minorities enrolling at UMass.

But John Lopes, career coordinator for the Committee for the Collegiate education of Black and other Minority Students (CCEBMS) said the decrease in minority enrollment can be attributed to a lack of recruitment by the University.

"(UMass) doesn't recruit in the proper fashion when recruiting minorities," Lopes said. "More of an effort is needed to target the right areas with large minority populations."

Lopes said more financial aid should be offered to lower-income minority students to encourage them to attend Umass. This year, he said, several minority students were unable to return to school because they were short money due to financial aid cuts.

Caban said the admissions office hopes to increase the number of minority students at UMass to better reflect the state's minority population of 6.8 percent, which was recorded in the 1980 state census.

According to the admissions office, 3.2 percent of the 1980 freshman class were minorities. In 1981, the number of minority students rose to 6.5 percent of incoming students, a total of 268.

Student wins 'Tia Maria' contest

Customers at Poor Richards who are waited on by bartenders Debbie Roden now have the opportunity to order her prize winning drink, made from an almond-flavored liquer.

Roden, 22, a senior journalistic studies major at the University of Massachusetts from Glastonbury, Conn., recently finished in the top ten in the first national "Tia Maria Shakeoff Contest" with her "Tia Tornado."

Roden said she was surprised to learn the recipe she sent to the Tia Maria company had been judged one of the ten best out of 10,000 sent in across the country.

"I was really excited because I never thought I'd hear from them after I sent in my entry," she said.

Roden said she had some difficulty coming up with a recipe to use for the contest once she heard about it.

"I was sitting around trying to think of something for a couple of days," she said. "Tia Maria isn't exactly easy to mix with."

The contest, sponsored by A.W. Taylor Distributors in Miami, the parent company of Tia Maria, was a promotion for Tia Maria recipe books.

Roden will receive promotional merchandise, such as mirrors and t-shirts, from the company in exchange for allowing them to use her name and recipe.

SGA accepting nominations for undergrad senate seats

By HANNAH HOSOM
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate, the main governing body of the Student Government Association, is accepting nominations for senate seats to be filled in an election held the first week in October.

The senate, which meets on Wednesday nights in the Campus Center, consists of undergraduates who have paid their Student Activities Tax, and who live in the area they represent. Positions are open from each dormitory, as well as Greek and commuter seats.

Nomination blanks may be obtained in room 420 of the Student Union, and must be returned by September 24. A minimum of 25 signatures is needed on each form, and those signing must belong to the dormitory or off-campus constituency which the candidate wishes to represent.

Election rules can be picked up with the nomination papers. They should be read carefully before returning the nomination, as they include specifics on campaigning. According to the rules, any candidate ignoring these could be disqualified from the election process.

Elected senators must participate in one of a number of committees including Academic Affairs, Rents and Fees, Budgets, and others which investigate and make recommendations on University policies. Senators must attend both the senate meetings as well as committee meetings to remain in the senate.

Current senators should attend tonight's meeting at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center, room 165. Policies developed over the summer by committees and officers will be presented for discussion, including a new affirmative action policy, policies by the Student Treasurer's Office, and updates on the Physical Plant chargeback situation.

President Jim Murphy intends to speak to the senate about the Gnomon Copy strike.

Speaker Sharon Davies said senators must attend in order to be aware of issues the senate is facing in order to vote on them the following week.

'Silent Witness' on Turin Shroud to run all next week at the Ark

"Silent Witness," a movie examining the mystery of the Shroud of Turin, will be shown nightly at 8 p.m. until Sunday, Sept. 19.

The free film uses scientific analyses of the cloth to try to trace its origins. The scientists in the movie claim the shroud shows a man of 5' 10", 175 lbs., with wounds from whipping, falling, a heavy weight on his shoulders, head and side wounds and wounds which could only have been caused by crucifiction. They claim the image on the shroud was caused by a short burst of radiation.

The film is being shown at the Ark, 758 N. Pleasant St., across from NOPE gym.

DVP hosts comedian Klein in year's first program

By TIM MacPHEE
Collegian Correspondent

Comedian Robert Klein's upcoming visit to the University of Massachusetts Tuesday night will mark a departure for the Distinguished Visitor's Program (DVP) at that school.

The group which is better known for booking more serious lecturers such as Bob Woodward, John Dean, Alger Hiss and Betty Williams, will be bringing the comic to Umass as a unique change of pace from the speakers.

Klein started out in show business in 1965 with the Chicago improvisational company, "Second City."

Early in his career he performed in Broadway musicals and in such movies as "The Owl and the Pussycat."

Since then he has appeared on and hosted such TV shows as "The Tonight Show," "Saturday Night Live," Merv Griffin and Dick Cavett.

Recently, Klein has taken his stand-up comedy to colleges. Tufts was one of the local colleges he visited.

Klein's performance is slated for 8:00 p.m., Tuesday in the Fine Arts Center.

Tickets are $2 for five college area students and $5 for the general public.

Future DVP lecturers will include Harvey Wasserman, columnist for New Age Magazine. His lecture will be titled, "Killing Our Own — The Disaster of America's Experience with Atomic Radiation", and is scheduled for Oct. 19.

On Oct. 26, former ambassador to Poland, and current President of the Foreign Policy Association William Schaufele, will speak on the crisis in Poland and its effects on East/West relations.

Health costs program OK'd

BOSTON, (AP) - An innovative program to control health-care cost by making hospitals live within pre-set budgets has secured federal approval and will begin Oct. 1, a state official confirmed yesterday.

The approval came Monday night and was announced by Gov. Edward J. King in a statement released on the eve of the statewide primaries in which King was vied with former Gov. Michael S. Dukakis for Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

The consortium includes the Massachusetts Hospital Association (MHA), the Massachusetts Medical Society, the Massachusetts Business Roundtable, Blue Cross, the Commercial Insurance Payers and the state.

One condition mandates that the state guarantee that health care costs fall 1.5 percent below the mean increse in Medicare costs nationally.

Winter invades Rockies

, (AP) — A furious snowstorm snuffed summer in the Rocky Mountains on yesterday , stranding hundreds and leaving thousands without power in snow up to twofeet deep, while floods in Kentucky forced the evacuation of an entire town.

Rep. Carl Perkins, D-Ky., who toured flooded eastern Kentucky, estimated that 1,200 and 1,500 homes were damaged in five counties, and said he would ask President Reagan for federal aid.

One man was missing after a canoe carrying three people overturned on the flood-swollen Kentucky River near Whitesburg, officials said.

Elsewhere, Tropical Storm Debby bore down on the Bahamas with 50 mph winds and forecasters said the season's fourth Atlantic storm was likely to strengthen.

In many areas of Wyoming and Montana, schools closed and traffic came to a halt as a winter storm that arrived weeks early snapped leaf-laden tree limbs onto power lines.

The snow, falling on ripe tomatoes and fresh corn, built drifts cartop-deep in many places.

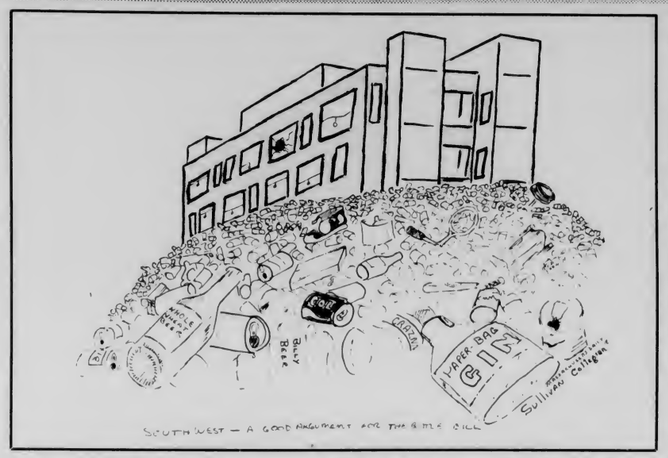
EDITORIAL/OPINION



Oswald – Pawn or Ruthless Killer?

This is a second in a two-part series by Dave McCarthy examining the various questions surrounding the assassination of John F. Kennedy in 1963.

Motive was the one thing no federal investigation could ever pin on Lee Harvey Oswald. By all accounts Oswald was a fan of the President and his family. But there were those among Oswald's acquaintances that did not think so highly of the President. These are the associations of L.H. Oswald:

Dave McCarthy

U.S. Military

According to Anthony Sumners in the book Conspiracy, Oswald was a Marine stationed in Japan at the time of the U-2 test flights. After receiving a secret security clearance, he was transferred stateside. Oswald then became an avowed Marxist, learning the Russian language at the Monterey School, and preaching Communism to the Marines.

After faking an injury to leave the Marines, Oswald defected to Russia. What makes the U.S. military connection suspicious is that through all of Oswald's Marxist ranting and raving at a sensitive military base, not one word of this behavior was written into his service record. Also, when Oswald walked in the American Embassy in Moscow and renounced his citizenship, consular official John McVickar noticed something puzzling about Oswald, and felt, "...he was following a pattern of behavior in which he had been tutored...in short, it seemed to me there was a possibility that he had been in contact with others before or during his Marine Corps tour who had guided and encouraged his actions."

C.I.A.

At the U.S. Embassy in Moscow, the official (Richard Snyder) who interviewed and processed Oswald was later discovered to have been a CIA agent. This fact was known but supressed by ex-CIA director Allen Dulles, who was on the Warren Commission. He later admitted to clandestantly coaching CIA and FBI representatives on how to answer sensitive questions at the Warren inquiry. This might be an indication that Oswald was no defector, but a low-level CIA operative.

Anti-Castro — FBI connection

Upon return to the U.S., Oswald encountered groups who despised the President. The Cuban exiles, who felt betrayed by Kennedy at the Bay of Pigs had a deep seated resentment towards the President. At this same time, Mafia kingpins were alarmed at the crusade the Kennedy administration was running against organized crime. Jimmy Hoffa, who had a personal vendetta against the Kennedys said about Robert Kennedy, "That vicious bastard...I'll break his back." East coast Mafia man Willie Weisburg said of Jack Kennedy, "Somebody should killer the f—er...I mean it; right in the White House." These are the groups and men who earlier were working for the government in an attempt to kill Fidel Castro. Now the wrath of these groups had focused on the President.

The 1978 Congressional investigation into the JFK assassination concluded that Lee Harvey Oswald had links with all the forementioned groups upon his return from Russia. It is my contention that a wayward element in the U.S. intelligence (dissatisfied over Kennedy's handling of the Cuban problem) activated the Mafia-Anti-Castro coalition to kill the President. Lee H. Oswald may just have been the fall guy in a much bigger plot. But to deviate from the accepted assassination theory is met with skepticism by most Americans. Are memories so short as to forget the rotten apples in government that were uncovered in the '70's? The fact of conspiracy is clear. Unfortunately, we will never know how widespread the plot was because 19 people, who had some type of knowlege of the assassination have been permenantly shut up.

What was the role of Lee H. Oswald? He might have answered the question while leaving the Dallas prison when he shrieked, "I'm just a patsy!"

Social funds– a slow death

President Reagan is responsible for a "dangerous deterioration in the federal enforcement of civil rights," according to 33 chairpersons of state civil rights agencies.

In a letter to the President, these people accused Reagan of blatantly neglecting the right of women, minorities, old people, handicapped and mentally retarded people, and young people. They came to Washington this week for the Annual Conference on Civil Rights, and requested a meeting with Reagan to discuss the gravity of the situation. Of course, Reagan said he couldn't make it, because of "heavy demands on his time."

This is quite typical of the way the Reagan administration has been revolutionizing the concept of civil rights. They feel that everybody should be treated as equals, with little or no "hand-outs" given to those people who need jobs, money, and other such trivialities. If the administration can't succeed in changing something by the books or by the courts, they'll just ignore it. It's a lot cheaper that way.

Josh Meyer

The Justice Department is the federal agency that is supposed to protect against discrimination in employment and education among other things. While the JD under Jimmy Carter responded to 23 official objections to discriminatory voting and election procedures in the first six months in office, the JD under Reagan responded to a whopping eight cases. In cases concerning discrimination in education and employment, the Reagan administration has looked into five cases in the first half, compared to 17 by Carter, and 24 by Nixon. And we all thought Nixon made friendly fascism what it is today!

Those figures denote changes made in the first six months of the term. Since then, Reagan has taken out the leaders of watchdog organizations within the administration, and replaced them with peons who will tote the line under the most trying conditions. For example, the chairman of the Commission on Civil Rights Arthur Flemming was "replaced" right after his Commission released a report warning that the budget cuts made by Reagan would reduce enforcement of civil rights and jeopardize gains made over the past 20 years. Coincidence? Doubt it.

Reagan's track record must be applauded on the strength of its conviction at least. He must really believe that cutting a few million dollar programs will somehow offset a $180 billion defense budget. He's even set up a Task Force on Deregulatory Relief to help weed out those social programs that are "burdensome, unnecessary, or counterproductive." This should not be cause for alarm, because after all, vice-President Bush has vowed to "maintain a committment to civil right or fair play or whatever it is, and will only review guidelines that went too far." I'd list some of the programs already cut or on the chopping block, but I don't have the space. Here's one though; even with fifty percent of the nation's minority students still in severely underfunded, racially isolated schools, all federal attempts to correct the imbalance have been eliminated.

It is obvious who will be hit hardest by Reagan's regressive policies. The Legal Services Corporation received massive funding cuts, and won't be able to protect those people who can't afford legal advice or representation, as it had in the past. Reagan had wanted to cut the program completely.

On top of this, there has been a documented rise in voting and election discrimination against blacks and Hispanics. True to form, Reagn had agreed to a new Voting Rights Act with less authority and manpower to protect the right of these people to vote in fair elections for candidates that will represent them. With black and Hispanic average incomes declining from 61 percent to 57 percent as compared to whites last year, the situation will only get worse.

Civil rights and liberties, such as the right to vote, and the right to a fair chance in education and employment, have greatly increased over the past twenty years. These gains must be protected, not arbitrarily slashed because of a naively simplistic economic program. Coincidentally, voting for the Massachusetts Primary elections has already begun. This might not change the whole structure of the federal government, but it can, and will help if everyone votes in the November general elections. Think about it, now, before it's too late.

Southwest – as far as trash goes, don't look any further

To the Editor

I am totally disgusted with the immature, irresponsible, idiotic manner in which the "college" students conducted themselves this past weekend. I have never seen more pollution in the form of litter and trash than I saw this past weekend. The only difference between Southwest and the ghettos of New York or Boston, was that the smell of urine in the elevators was missing. A janitor in my dorm told me that they had been cleaning up since 7:00 a.m. and this was at noon.

Come on people, we are supposed to be mature, responsible, and reasonably intelligent young adults. This is our home for the next 4-9 months. Even animals don't behave the way we did this past weekend. We all know better than to litter so the difficulty is not a matter of ignorance. Why did this happen? One clue to me is the percentage of trash that had to do with the consumption of alcoholic beverages. 90 percent of the litter I saw was in the form of beer cans and bottles (mostly broken). Much of the mess was within 20 steps of a trash receptacle. Am I to assume that the majority of us were too drunk to walk the few extra feet out of our way to dispose of our containers properly? Of course not, we were all too lazy. However, the blame cannot be shoved off on the ones who did the littering. The blame must be shared by those of us who stood by and said nothing while our friends and fellow students made a pigsty out of our homes. I would be lynched if I were to suggest that alcohol be banned from the campus and I doubt that such a rule could be enforced, but if people who know better continue to behave in an irresponsible manner, they are inviting the administration of this university to treat us like immature adolescents who need to be told how to act like adults.

We are learning to be the leaders of our society, lets show that we can behave in a way that people will look up to, not down on.

Dukakis held a slim lead in Boston. And in Dukakis' hometown, the Boston suburb of Brookline, Dukakis was leading 5,343 to 882 with six of 16 precincts reporting.

Dukakis had reassembled his old liberal coalition to return in a tough campaign that said the conservative King burdened the state with a "corruption tax."

King pitched law-and-order and return of the death penalty. He promoted a receptive climate for business and ridiculed Dukakis as "Governor Dutaxes." The race was considered a tossup at the end.

Boston television station WNEV projected Dukakis the winner, by a 53-47 percent margin, when the polls closed at 8 p.m. The station based its projection on voters' responses as they left the polls.

Atlantics at Nail, again

The Atlantics
The Rusty Nail
Friday, September 10

By SAUL NATHANSON
Collegian Correspondent

A Friday night at the Rusty Nail. You walk in, argue with the manager about giving you a drinking stamp, then finally walk inside. An opening band, on this night a group called "Private Tunings" are already halfway through their set, so you find a strategic spot and grab an ashtray. They turn out to be a five man band from Amherst: three guitarists, a drummer and a singer/percussionist. Heavy guitar sound is backed by solid drum support, as they move into Joe Jackson's "I'm the Man" and the Tubes' Talk to Ya Later" with controlled enthusiasm. The only weak part is the lead vocals, which somehow could have been more convincing. But they finish off with a "Who" medley from Tommy, so the crowd is happy. That's all that counts, really. All things considered, a good warm-up for the main attraction.

The Atlantics

Intermission.

You smile at the girl bartender and she gives you a beer. You tip her a quarter in appreciation. Some conversation, some Asteroids, a little voyeurism, and four butts later the Atlantics pounce on the stage.

Another five man band: Fred Pineau on lead guitar; B. Wilkinson on bass, sax and vocals; Paul Caruso on drums and vocals; Tom Hauck on guitar and vocals; and Bobby Marron as the lead vocalist. This is the same band that plays around the New England circuit and opened for Squeeze on their last tour.

The Atlantics waste no time in setting the mood. Fred Pineau's guitar leads were downright sinister at times, especially in "When You Believe in Love" and "Teenage Flu," a song that has bitching vocals reminiscent of something from Joan Jett, but infinitely more refined.

"Can't Wait Forever" was a well mixed tune perforated by Caruso's deep drum sounds and haunting background vocal work from Wilkinson and Hauck.

Bobby Marrons' voice was strong and precise throughout the night, and it was emphatic in such memorable tunes as "Weekend" and the popular "Lonely Hearts." In fact, the synthesis of the various individuals into one cohesive, rock n' roll organism was so well done at times that you couldn't help but wonder where these guys will go from here.

This is not to say that there were no weak spots; there were several, namely B. Wilkinson's limited tenure on saxophone (a little scratchy, B.) and the guitar mixes that at times were not that strong. Still, Marrons' vocals and Caruso's drums more than made up the difference.

Tickets are on sale now for the Broadway musical "Annie," which will be presented at the Fine Arts Center on Tuesday, September 28 through Thursday, September 30.

At top is Albert Finney and Aileen Quinn from this past summer's film version. Below is Mollie Hall in the Broadway version. Sandy will be played by newcomer Roxanne.

CHIROPRACTERS

OH, MY ACHING BACK

If you're like a lot of people, you may have occasional or persistent back pain and wonder what caused it. You try to think of some incident in which you may have strained your back, and come up with nothing. But there must be some reason why you have back pains. The truth is that even the simplest of incidents may be the cause, such as reaching high on a shelf to get something. Or stooping to pick up something that has fallen. Or maybe you need some tips on good posture.

Whatever the cause, the problem may be that your spinal column is out of alignment. No pain-killing drug can cure the CAUSE. It can dull the pain for awhile and give you temporary relief. But if your back is out of alignment, the pain will probably not go away unless you get the treatment you need. No symptom can be more depressing than persistent back pain. Don't delay treatment when help is readily available.

Its built-in business formulas let you perform complicated finance, accounting and statistical functions—the ones that usually require a lot of time and a stack of reference books, like present and future value calculations, amortizations and balloon payments.

It all means you spend less time calculating, and more time learning. One keystroke takes the place of many.

The calculator is just part of the package. You also get a book that follows most business courses; the Business Analyst Guidebook. Business professors helped us write it, to help you get the most out of calculator and classroom. A powerful combination.

Jimmy Connors, athlete of the year

By ELLIOTT KALB
Collegian Correspondent

My early vote for Athlete of the Year goes to James Scott Connors. After a decade of playing the most consistent championship calibre tennis in the history of the game (9 consecutive years of advancing to the semi-finals at the U.S. Open) Connors is proudly reclaiming his number 1 ranking in the game.

Commentary

To the knowledgeable tennis fan, Connors never lost enough to "come back." He has won far more tournaments in the last decade — 95 — than anyone else playing today. However, to the casual sports fan, Connors has been a mystery, not winning a major tournament (the U.S Open, Wimbledon, the French, or the Australian) since the fall of 1978.

His victory at Flushing Meadows, last Sunday in the finals of the U.S. Open, over Ivan "Chicken" Lendl (6-3, 6-2, 4-6, 6-4) was a fitting ending to a storybook season. Connors defeated John McEnroe earlier this summer at Wimbledon and now has seven Grand Slamtitles to his credit (four U.S. Opens, two Wimbledons and one Australian).

Connors is a battler. He is the ultimate competitor. He dies a little with every point he loses. He rises with every point he wins. He is every bit as much to tennis what Pete Rose is to baseball. Connors grunted and pounded away at Lendl for over 3 hours before defeating the 22 year old Czech. The 30 year old from Belleville, Illinois also received something he never had before: unquestioned fan support.

"These people here enjoy watching people come here and break their backs and spill their guts. And I've been breaking my back and spilling my guts since the first day I came here."

As an unabashed Connors fanatic since 1974, it has been interesting to watch the general fan support for the cocky street-fighter. When Connors first burst upon the scene in 1973 he supplanted the popular American Stan Smith as the world's top player. Connors was viewed as a crybaby, an obnoxious brat and a cocksure, arrogant bastard.

In the mid-70's a blonde Swede named Bjorn Borg toppled Connors twice in Wimbledon finals and won the world-wide respect and admiration of fans everywhere, including the United States.

By 1978, John McEnroe rose past Connors and Borg as number 1 in the world.

As in professional wrestling, the top of the tennis world seems to have good guys and bad guys. Borg with his ice-like nerves, has always been a "good guy."McEnroe, usually booed, is a "bad guy." Connors, once the supreme bad guy — is now a "good guy."

Connors has mellowed. He is now a happily married man and has a young son named Brett. His tantrums are less apparent, his humor more noticeable (to McEnroe: "my three year old is better behaved than you"). And he has seized what is probably his last opportunity (with nemesis Borg sitting out both Wimbleton and the U.S. Open for a major title.)

At the end of a brilliant career, Connors is clearly enjoying his role as both a fan favorite and a champion.

He has dominated his sport for the last couple of months and has carved his niche in tennis history. He has a terrific shot at any of those athlete or sportsmen of the year awards.

Like my other favorite athletes—Muhammed Ali, Reggie Jackson, and Billy Jean King to name a few — Jimbo is a true champion.

Craig innocent in fatal crash

WAREHAM (AP) - Former Olympic hockey goalie Jim Craig was found innocent yesterday of motor vehicle homocide in a Memorial Day weekend crash that claimed a woman's life.

"I have never changed my statement from the start," said Craig after the verdict. "As happy as I am, I couldn't be any sadder that a death was a result of the accident."

Seconds after closing arguments were completed, District Court Judge Dennis Collari announced his verdict.

"I was pleasantly shocked," by the speed of the decision, said Craig who had chosen to be tried by a judge not a jury.

Craig, 25, was the goalie on the United States Olympic hockey team that one the gold medal in 1980. He is now in the training camp of the Boston Bruins of the National Hockey League.

Margaret F. Curry, 29, of New Bedford, died in the crash, which occured shortly before midnight May 29, on Route 6 near the Sailway restaurant in Mattapoisett.

Stickwomen score in OT, win 1—0

By JENNIFER KUPPER
Collegian Correspondent

It was an exciting afternoon at the NOPE field yesterday afternoon as the UMass Women's field hockey team opened their season by defeating Northwestern University in overtime 1-0.

For the first five minutes of the game it was a constant midfield battle of performance stickwork. However, for the remaining thirty minutes of the first half UMass dominated the field and kept the NU defense on guard at all times.

The UMass women played a game that relied on passing, patience, and precision. Sandy Kobel led the stickwomen to a number of key connection plays. Over and over again the ball went from Kobel to Megan Donnelly, with options leading to either Tina Coffin or Patty Smith (at opposite sides of the field) which brought the UMass women up to the NU goal.

Seven minutes and 28 seconds into the first half UMass saw its closest opportunity to score. The NU defense caused a UMass offensive foul and UMass lost possession.

UMass did regain the ball right away though, as freshman Megan Donnelly tackled a NU player and quickly passed off to Pam Moryl. The NU defense reacted quickly however, and UMass was unable to get a shot on goal away.

Five minutes later, with a series of passes between co-captain Ro Tudryn, Patty Smith, and Moryl sent the women into another goal situation. A cross from Moryl in right field gave two offensive players the chance to just touch the ball with their sticks — however, no goal.

Twenty minutes into the first half, NU headed downfield with the ball. The tremendous hustle and effort made by Judy Morgan and Donnelly ended the NU threat. Morgan continued to play a fierce game with interceptions ending further NU attempts on goal.

Nancy Goode also shattered the hopes of the Northwestern offense with back to back interceptions. The midfield became hectic as both offenses scurried to gain possession. Co-captain Carol Progulske used tenacious stickwork to help out UMass.

Combination passing by Morgan, Kobel, Coffin and Donnelly led the UMass offense to goal once again. With a drive across field Tish Stevens was able (with great effort) to make contact with the ball — but there was still no goal at the end of the first half.

UMass came out hard and fast in the second half. The immediate offensive punch that coach Hixon was looking for was put to work, but with no scoring result. Within two minutes the NU offense came up with the ball but they also lost it in the UM shooting circle.

Morgan brought the ball downfield alone and crossed it past the cage. An NU foul was committed and UMass had a corner. UMass was then called for a delayed game for not taking the corner quickly enough. NU had the ball again and another scoring opportunity was lost.

NU's Nancy Fisher, their primary offensive threat, brought the play up to UMass 1 goal. Progulske and Fisher battled for possession and once again Progulske came up the victor. She, in turn, started UMass in a combination of passes downfield where Moryl crossed to Coffin who "had a piece of the ball" and another shot was made by Mass. Again, however, there was no score.

On the next corner, Morgan drove the ball toward the NU goal, but NU's goalie blocked the shot with a fine save.

With 3:15 left in the game UMass had the ball in the NU goal area, an NU defender caught sticks with Patty Smith giving UMass a corner. Morgan continued to take the corner drive, and when the ball deflected off a NU's defensive stick, UMass had a long corner. The shot was wide, however.

With a minute left in regular play, Judy Morgan and the NU goalie held a private battle of drive and save. The game ended in a 0-0 tie and a seven and a half minute of overtime was called for.

With 6:09 left on the clock in overtime Morgan made contact with the ball, and it landed...in the goal! However, the goal was taken back on a call of dangerous hitting.

With 1:24 remaining on the clock, UMass had another corner. Pam Moryl flicked the ball high, and NU's goalie could not save it. UMass had scored!

"I knew we could do it," said Coach Hixon, "our defense and midfield did an excellent job. And now our offense will be looking to connect within the +25."

The team has a week before its next match at Boston College on September 21.

Booters drop Bridgeport, 3—1

By CHARISSE E. FEINERMAN
Collegian Staff

Boyden Hill was slightly more vacant than it usually is during a UM lacrosse game, but it sure was a nice start for the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team, as they defeated their first opponent of the regular season, the University of Bridgeport, 3-2.

Bridgeport gave an early scare to UM when Bridgeport's Mark Vanston scored off an assist from teammate John Shepart. UM coach Jeff Gettler's squad seemed awakened by this shock and buckled down almost immediately when goalkeeper Jeff Smith made a number of key saves within the next five minutes.

"We got confused, we got behind, we were asleep," said Gettler of the initial goal.

The Minutemen did manage to leave the field at the end of the first half with a tie score of 1-1 however. The kickers acquired the tying goal when captain Kevin Flynn scored at 41:23 into the first half on an assist from Kayvan Khatami. Flynn executed a left-footed volley from about 16 yards. He was able to do this when UM's Fritz Pike jumped and took a defender from the Bridgeport team out of commission.

Bridgeport's goalkeeper during the first portion of the first half was Joe Sander. Sander came out of the game with approximately 17 minutes left in the half. Sander left as a result of an injury sustained while blocking a shot on goal by UM's Tom Ushok. Sander left the game with one save and let up no goals.

UMass got its second goal of the game at 9:42 of the second half. This wasn't soon enough for the eager crowd that reared when Khatami scored the goal unassisted.

Bridgeport's second goalkeeper, Steve Rosenberg saved a shot that was headed in by Ushok. Rosenberg's save was picture perfect and even had the UM crowd smiling.

Shouts of "get it together" and "nice going" were coming off of the UM bench from the coach as well as from the other squad members, as Khatami scored a third goal for the Minutemen.

The kickers had a scare with about 11 minutes to go, when Bridgeport's Benedict Wisseh's shot knicked the post of the Massachusetts net. Shortly after this, however, Wisseh returned with the last goal scored of the game. With ten seconds left on the clock, Wisseh introduced the ball into the UMass net, with an assist from teammate Bob Harrington.

An ecstatic UMass soccer team, which has yet to feel the full thrill of victory, could have convinced an onlooker that they had just won the World Cup.

Gettler was particularly pleased with goalkeeper Smith, who played a full ninety minutes, saved five shots and let in two goals.

The Red Sox are okay by me

By TOM WHALEN
Collegian Correspondent

Why is everyone so down on the Red Sox?

You know, the team that was picked to finish fifth in the American League East and now finds itself battling the likes of Milwaukee and Baltimore for the divisional crown.

From the outset, it would appear that the Calvinistic attitude of fatalism that afflicts the New England multitudes in the dog days of the pennant race every year is now in full bloom. Such throaty, indignant cries as "the Sox will choke" can be heard at every street corner, tavern, and household from Bangor, Maine to the Cape.

Except for a few loyal diehards, the general concensus is that the Beantowners will succomb to a common, traditional malady that inflicts the Bosox, choking.

Their fears are well-founded. Since 1948, when the Sox the first American League play-off to the Cleveland Indians, Boston has somehow managed to lose the pennant six times in the final moments of September. But as that rambunctuous group of miracle-workers of 1967 proved, history doesn't always have to repeat itself.

This year's edition of the Sox have perhaps taken note of this fact. From the damp, drizzly days of April to the last waning days of Indian Summer, these Sox have played a gutsy, never-say die brand of baseball. This hearty band of overachievers has played to win and their desire to reach the pinnacle of the A.L. East has never wavered.

It is significant to note that the Sox have come from behind to win ballgames phenomenally over forty times prior to this writing. They are "Cardiac Kids" to be sure!

What is their formula for success?

Some cite the potent offense of the effervescent Dwight Evans, dependable Jim "Awesome Ed" Rice, the defending league batting champ Carney "The Clutch" Lansford, and the ageless nonperil Carl "Yaz" Yazstremski, as the answer.

Others claim it is the stalwarts of the bullpen: sinkerballer Bob "Bigfoot" Stanley, southpaw Tom Burgmier, fireballer Mark Clear and the slippery when wet, Luis Aponte.

This does not mention the contributions of Wade Boggs, Dave Stapleton, Garry "Mugsy" Allenson, Rick Miller or estimable leadership of manager Ralph Houk. The answer is that there isn't an answer.

All that matters is the number of wins thay have chalked up and they have been able to accumulate that inconsiderable abundence this season. Any deep, analytical study of the whys and hows detract from this achievement.

In the same vein we, as the Fenway faithful, should not be so critical of them. Perhaps, just perhaps, they'll win it all this year to fulfill our wildest aspirations. Since they still are very much in the thick of things, it is unfair and pessimistic to chastise them.

In short, we should sit back and give thanks to have the opportunity of witnessing a truly remarkable team in an enthralling pennant fight. Indeed, just as we had done in 1967.

UMass campus favors Dukakis

By BRIAN FITZ MAURICE
Collegian Staff

Student leaders and Administrators of the University of Massachusetts community responded to the results of the Democratic gubernatorial primary with cautious optimism.

Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance John DeNyse said he is very hopeful about Dukakis' success.

"Iam pleased to see he has concerns for higher education. I believe he has made some statements about tuition levels, which of course concern all of us," he said.

William Field, dean of students, was cautioulsy optimistic about Dukakis' victory.

"It is my hope that Dukakis, in the four years after his first defeat, has developed an appreciation of public higher education," Field said. "I think in his first term, Dukakis didn't understand public higher education."

"If students and faculty take very seriously communicating to Dukakis what coming to, and teaching at UMass means, he could find out what UMass is all about," Field Said.

"In my mind there is a doubt. Dukakis is very bright, very capable, but we have to convince him that the brightest and best people coming out are coming out of state institutions," he said.

Student Government Association President Jim Murphy said he was hopeful, but not a supporter of Dukakis because of his lack of a clear platform for higher education. Murphy said he was unimpressed wth "the Duke's" campaign promise for a one year tuition hike freeze.

"If one listens to what Dukakis has been saying for the past couple days I would think that Dukakis offers a better atmosphere for change...With King I'm very certain of what the future had in store," Murphy said.

"Higher Education is peripheral in importance to the corruption issue, and was pretty much dropped on everybody's agenda, which I think is a shame," said Murphy.

Senate Treasurer Lisa Potter expects increased attention to higher education as an issue.

"Dukakis appears to have changed his opinions toward higher education and King's failure to recognize the importance of higher education was probably responsible for losing the primary," she said.

Potter said if Dukakis realizes the important role this issue played in his winning the primary, he will not forget promises once in office.

Senate Speaker Sharon Davies said she hopes for a more educationally oriented administration with Dukakis.

Democrats hold conference to encourage party's unity

BOSTON (AP) — Massachusetts Democrats began to bind the wounds of a bitter fight for the gubernatorial nomination yesterday, displaying a show of unity amid talk of the lingering scars.

Former Gov. Michael S. Dukakis wrenched the nomination from Gov. Edward J. King, who had ousted Dukakis in the primary four years ago. Dukakis, with John Kerry as running mate, faces victorious Republican nominee John Sears, running with Leon Lombardi, in November.

Otherwise, the primary election was generally good to incumbents, with at least one notable exception: ailing Middlesex District Attorney John Droney lost the Democratic nomination to L. Scott Harshbarger, a former assistant DA making his second challenge.

The Democratic race for the governor's nomination was a bruising campaign between arch rivals, but the consensus on the morning after was that the party could unite behind Dukakis.

But Republicans described hurt feelings and an ideological split on the Democratic side that they hope will give Sears victory Nov. 2.

"It certainly was a hardfought fight," said Senate President William Bulger, who supported King. "And I have another layer of scar tissue to prove it." But Bulger added his support of the Democratic ticket.

"I intend to work starting today for that victory in November," Bulger said. "It is true that there are many points of disagreement, but we won't get into them today, but the fact of the matter is there are many of us that would insist that we still have a voice."

King was absent from the news conference, described as an introduction to the Democratic ticket and not as a formal unity party. He was closeted with aides in his Statehouse office later in the day.

King campaign manager Peter Flynn and Administration and Finance Secretary David Bartley did attend, vowing to [illegible] for a party victory.

[illegible]kakis said he had talked with King earlier. "He said [illegible] he wanted to rest today. I told him when we talked, [illegible]ng gone through the same thing four years ago, a day [illegible] two of rest and to be with your family is awfully important."

Gnomon Copy Services strikers prepared for long battle

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

The strike at Gnomon Copy Services in Amherst center could go on indefinitely if no agreement is reached at a negotiation debate Wednesday between employees and ownership, said Gnomon employee Mary-Erin Creek.

About 100 people, including Student Government Association President Jim Murphy, participated in a support rally outside the store from 3 to 5 p.m. Tuesday. Creek said the rally was a success and the strike fund collected $200.

Crook said the rally showed community and customer support and collecting the money helped to keep the strikers' spirits up. She said all 11 employees are striking.

"This area could not hold too many more people," she said while gesturing to the somewhat cramped quarters surrounding the store.

Business has gone down 80 to 90 percent since the strike began September 8. They should be making $1200 to $2000 a day in September, Crook said.

Gnomon's employees went on strike because of low wages and lack of a health insurance plan. Crook said it's been 20 months since the last pay raise. Health insurance was dropped in August without any notice from the owners, she added.

Store co-owner Catherine Iannacchino, who purchased the store August 13, said the employees have not given them a chance to negotiate in good faith and workers immediately began an "us" against "them" relationship when the new ownership began.

When co-owner Roland Wetherbee's father died at the end of last month, the owners requested a two week delay in the previously scheduled August 31 negotiation talks, Iannacchino said. The employees did not accept the request and decided to strike anyway, she added.

During Tuesday's rally the owners passed out leaflets advertising available positions at Gnomon and promptly received 100 phone calls, Iannacchino said.

"I just felt great about the whole thing," she said, adding they also plan to advertise in all area newspapers.

Crook said the employees see the situation differently.

"The owners didn't want to negotiate until a few weeks into the semester," she said, adding that by then they would have made a great deal of money (mostly through student purchases) and would have no incentive to negotiate.

Crook said Gnomon has now hired four or five "scabs" to carry the workload. She referred to the "scabs" as "real apathetic people."

"If you keep workers dissatisfied then you have a rationale for not paying them," she said, adding that people shouldn't have to be dissatisfied with their jobs.

Employees want a 50 cent pay raise across the board, Crook said.

There will be a show cause hearing in Northampton District Court concerning last Thursday's altercation at the picket line involving Tobi Saisa of Amherst and Gnomon serviceman Anthony Wright. Wright allegedly attacked Saisa but is filing counter charges, Crook said.

"So far everyone has been real, real good about coming out and doing their picket shift. We'll go as long as we can," Crook said.

Pope John Paul II meets with Arafat in private session

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II gave Yasser Arafat a private audience Yesterday, telling him Palestinians deserve a homeland but everyone in the Middle East must shun "violence in every form, above all terrorism and retaliation," the Vatican announced.

The pope later addressed 20,000 people in St. Peter's Square and called on Israel and Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization to "accept the existence and reality of the other."

The 20-minute meeting here, the first between Arafat and a pope, drew a sharp protest from Israel.

The PLO chairman made no public comment on the Vatican session, but a Palestinian priest said Arafat considered it a turning point in the PLO's quest for international support.

Arafat, wearing a green uniform and his familiar blackand-white headdress, was whisked in and out of the Vatican through a litle-used side entrance, riding in a bullet-proof limousine followed by police cars bristling with submachine guns.

He spent about a half-hour in the Roman Catholic city-state, smiling and flashing the victory sign with his fingers as he sped by reporters on his way out.

A formal photograph released by the Vatican showed a smiling Arafat, without the customary pistol on his hip, standing with the white-robed pontiff.

In a three-paragraph communique, the Vatican said John Paul spoke in English with Arafat, expressing "good will for the Palestinians" and telling him that a Middle East peace solution "must exclude recourse to arms and violence in every form, and above all terrorism and retaliation."

John Paul also called for "a recognition of the rights of all peoples and in particular those of Palestinian people for their own homeland and of Israel for security."

Neither the Vatican communique nor PLO spokesmen revealed what Arafat told the pope.

Bellotti suggests limit in car insurance hikes

BOSTON (AP) — Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti recommended the state limit an increase in car insurance rates next year and save consumers more than 80 percent of what the industry wants.

Bellotti is recommending a rate increase limited to 2.5 percent, or $28.2 million, compared to industry's request of 19.4 percent, or $216 million.

Under Bellotti's proposal, the average policyholder would face an increase of about $11, compared to the $80 hike if industry gets its way. This year, the average policy costs about $406.

Bellotti noted lower inflation rates and the improved accident record of drivers in the state to support his recommendation.

Companies writing automobile insurance have argued for their request, saying the increase is needed to offset rising costs for medical care and auto repairs.

Insurance Commissioner Michael J. Sabbagh is scheduled to open hearing on the industry request Oct. 4, and the commissioner's decision each year usually is announced in late December.

Bellotti's office will argue its case at the hearings.

Sabbagh granted a 15 percent increase this year, amounting to about $139 million in addition premiums. The companies had sought a 24.5 percent increase for 1982, or about $225 million.

According to Bellotti's office, research on the handling of claims by several companies suggests industry may have overstated their losses in this year's rate filing by almost $10 million.

Abortion amendment delayed until spring

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate leaders agreed yesterday to put off until next year a debate and votes on a constitutional amendment designed to limit or eliminate legalized abortions.

Meanwhile, there were indications that a filibuster against a second anti-abortion measure may be drawing to a close.

As Republican leaders grew increasingly impatient with the pace of the debate, Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said he would abandon efforts to get a constitutional amendment through the Senate in the waning days of the 97th Congress.

Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr. promised Hatch that the Senate would take up his amendment next spring.

The amendment would allow either Congress or the state legislatures to prohibit or regulate abortions. Because a constitutional amendment requires a two-thirds vote, it faced almost certain defeat in the Senate.

"I don't believe we have the requisite two-thirds vote at this time," said Hatch of the amendment, which has become an issue in his own re-election campaign in Utah.

The amendment had been competing with legislation proposed by conservative Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C..

Brezhnev denounces Reagan's peace plan

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev called President Reagan's peace plan for the Middle East "basically vicious" Wednesday for denying the Palestinians an independent nation, and announced his own proposals for "lasting peace."

Brezhnev's plan is the third major initiative for a comprehensive Middle East peace settlement in as many weeks, and appeared identical to the plan adopted by the Arab summit meeting in Fez, Morocco last week.

He seemed to be bidding for a more active role in a settlement by emphasizing the role of the U.N. Security Council or its permanent members, of which the Soviet Union is one. Brezhnev also reiterated the long-standing Soviet proposal for an internatinal conference on the Middle East.

The Fez declaration was adopted a week after Reagan laid out his own blueprint for a Middle East settlement.

Israel immediately rejected both the Arab plan and Reagan's, which differs in several respects from both the Arab proposals and the Israeli government's position.

Brezhnev, speaking at a Kremlin dinner for South Yemen's President Ali Nasser Mohammed, claimed Reagan was merely "pretending to be trying to find a settlement of the Middle East conflict."

"But the proposals of the U.S.A. are basically vicious," Brezhnev said. "They deny the Palestinians the right to self-determination and creation of their own state..."

The Soviet leader said he was "profoundly convinced," in contrast, that his own proposals could obtain "a just and lasting peace in the Middle East."

First student senate meeting delayed a week

By CHARLES A. MARRAM
Collegian Staff

In a last minute decision, the opening of the 1982-83 Undergraduate Student Senate, originally scheduled for last night was postponed because Student Government officials said senate members needed time to familiarize themselves with proposed issues.

Sharon Davies, student senate speaker, said there were many proposals generated over the summer which many Senate members are currently unfamiliar with. She said members will have to read through a number of reports before they will be able to vote on the passage of these proposals.

Davies said too much time would have been spent at the senate meeting answering questions concerning the various proposals because some members do not know specifics.

"There is a number of materials senate members will have to look over before they can vote on many of the motions. They did not have an earlier opportunity to review the various reports concerning developments that occurred over the summer," she said.

Davies said a lengthy procedure at the meeting would be the passage of the summer coordinating committee meeting minutes. The committee handles student issues which develop over the summer break, outline policy procedures and forward recommendations concerning these procedures to the full Senate for approval.

"There is a number of materials senate members will have to look over before they can vote on many of the motions," said Davies.

"In the past, policies were developed by the coordinating committee and passed by the senate without much thought. This summer, a lot of time was spent developing policy recommendations. The senate should give a good deal of thought on these recommendations before they vote on passage," said Davies, "It's only right that we give the members time to read the various papers and proposals before we ask them to vote." The senate will vote on a number of proposals developed by the summer coordinating committee, including a personnel, election and ticket policy.

The personnel policy outlines the proper procedures concerning the hiring, firing, filing of grievances, of Student Activity Trust Fund Employees.

Developed by the Government Affairs Office, the election outlines the guidelines and timelines for student senate elections. The full senate will have to approve or institute changes to the policy and pass it immediately to meet the schedualed October 4 elections.

The ticket policy outlines the procedure for selling tickets to Resident Student Organization (RSO) events. Present policy lacks an accountability for RSO group sales as mandated by the last senate audit.

Davies said informational material will be distributed as soon as possible. Senate members should be ready to vote on these issues for the Senate Opening planned for Wednesday, Sept. 22, at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center.

Although many students find it hard to believe, there are still over 800 tickets available for Friday night's Santana concert.

Bill Pritchett, program coordinator for the Union Program Council (UPC), the organization presenting Santana, said many students have stopped by the UPC office or have called asking whether the show at the Curry Hicks Cage is sold out.

He said because of the popularity of the performance, many students are assuming the concert is already sold out.

"It's going to be a fabulous show," Pritchett said. "It's a chance for people to see a phenomenal guitarist and his band."

Tickets are on sale at the Fine Arts Center box office, Union Records Unlimited and Faces in Amherst.

Earlier this week, Pritchett said, "The chances are good for Santana selling out." At that time, he said he believed this weekend's Jewish holiday and a lack of time for students to prepare for the concert were factors that held ticket sales down.

Another part of the problem, Pritchett said, is because the concert is general admission, many students will wait to buy tickets at the door.

Ticket sales for the show have been largely limited to on campus outlets because Pritchett said he wants to give students "priority" for the show.

Future UPC productions include Jimmy Cliff and Peter Tosh at the Fine Arts Center on Sept. 23 and Joe Jackson on Oct. 21.

The tickets for Cliff and Tosh are on sale at Union Records and the Fine Arts Center Box Office.

Students to be charged $5 for new alcohol ID cards

University Health Services, in cooperation with University of Massachusetts and Amherst Police, will be issuing alcohol identification cards to anyone in the college community who wants one.

Gil Mottla, safety officer for University Health Services, said this will be "the I.D." used on campus, as well as at several establishments in town for the purchase or consumption of alcohol.

Anyone who is over the age of 20 and has a young looking face, will definitely benefit from this I.D., said Mottla.

Mottla said a driver's license or any other form of identification will not be accepted at on-campus facilities or many places in town.

In order to receive an alcohol I.D., a valid form of identification must be presented. A driver's license, passport, or military services dispatch papers will be accepted. However, charge cards and social security cards will not.

This identification has been offered to students for a few years. Mottla said she believes it is a great convenience since it will be the only I.D. card that will be accepted on campus and at surrounding bar. Each card will have a picture of the person on it to prevent misuse.

The alcohol identification cards can be obtained for a fee of $5 dollars in the lobby of Campus Center on September 23, between 1 and 3 p.m. The I.D. cards are issued by the Massachusetts Registry.

Jones library in Amherst to celebrate Founder's Day

By ANNE CHAPMAN
Collegian Correspondent

The Jones Library in Amherst will break away from its traditional manner of celebrating the birth of its founder, Samuel Minot Jones, centering the event around the library's elaborate art collections.

The Founder's Day celebration will begin with a talk by Erin McDonald, researcher for the successful presentation of the art collection. The library possesses copies of her published research on the history of the many oil paintings on display.

"It was an extremely complicated process to attempt to account for 117 paintings that were donated in 1926. There were many places to look because you simply could not hang 117 paintings in this building alone," said Daniel Lombardo, curator of Special Collections.

Finally, Gail Husch, director of the Holyoke Art Museum, will be conducting a gallery tour of the collection. The Holyoke Art Museum has also been able to boast ownership of 27 William A. Burnett paintings. One of these paintings will be featured this Thursday evening.

The collection was established by Burnett, who was originally a New York businessman, and in conjunction with his father, eventually established the H.D. Fearing Co. Hat Factory in Amherst.

Burnett, by virtue of his profitable business, managed to purchase a prodigious art collection, which he displayed in a gallery located in back of his Amherst home.

Upon his death in 1924, Burnett's family donated to the library some 117 paintings, 18 bronze statues, tables and chairs, and 125 art volumes.

The Jones Library now has in its possession some fine examples of both American and European art. The most famous piece that the library owns is Albert Bierstadt's "Platte River, Nebraska," which is currently on loan to the Mead Art Museum at Amherst College.

Founders Day became a significant event in its tenth year, when the library took on the task of celebrating the birth of Samuel Jones, the library itself, and literature in general.

Each year the Jones Library Founders Day celebration features an important literary speaker who discusses topics of literary significance. Lombardo said there have been a great number of literary greats who have considered it a honor to volunteer to speak in the library's behalf.

Speakers at the past Founder's Day celebrations have constituted an impressive list of people from a variety of literary disciplines.

Some of the more renowned and interesting people who have spoken were Lyman Beecher Stowe, grandson of Harriet Beecher Stowe, Ellery Sidgwick, editor of the Atlantic Monthly, Esther Forbes, Francis Brown, editor of the New York Times Book Review, and Martha Dickinson Bianchi, Emily Dickinson's niece.

"Since Amherst has always been considered a center for literature, it is therefore a very good place for artists to convene and speak," Lombardo said.

Samuel Jones, a former resident of Amherst, reaped his fortune in a Chicago lumber business. Upon his death, Jones' assets were bequeathed to his son. However, Jones' will also stipulated if his son died before the age of 21, the money would be transferred to the town of Amherst. Unfortunately this tragedy occured and in 1918, the town of Amherst received close to $700,000 to be used for the construction of the Jones' library.

The library opened on Sept. 7, 1921, in six rooms of the Amherst House Hotel. However, when the hotel was destroyed in a fire in 1926, the library moved to a farmhouse on North Pleasant Street.

Finally, in 1928, the familiar stone building on Amity Street opened to the public as the Jones Library.

Emergency construction and repair projects hinder UMass

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Correspondent

It may seem to students that several construction projects now underway have been timed to aggravate them, but that isn't the case, H. J. Littlefield, Director of Planning for the University OF Massachusetts said.

Steam pipes are being replaced near the Northeast Residential Area in one project, and emergency repairs were made on steam pipes in Southwest in another. A water main break near the North Physican Education Building (NOPE) has prompted emergency repairs there, and two improvement projects involve work along North Pleasant Street.

Steam pipes between Worcester Dining Commons and the Northeast Residential Area are being replaced under a state grant," Littlefield said.

"The pipes were old and had several leaks," he said.

The project is being administered directly by the state's Division of Capital Planning and Operations.

In the Sothwest Residential Area, emergency repairs were required because steampipes showed signs of leaks. To avoid a major loss of steam, Physical Plant workers dug the pipes out and patched them.

The most visible change is work being done on North Pleasant Street near Hasbrouck and the Graduate Research Center. Changes are being made to increase safety along that street, Littlefield said. The Safety Committee of the University Health Council made several specific recommendations which are now being implemented, Littlefield said.

This project includes repair and installment of a sidewalk from the Graduate Research Center to the Work along North Pleasant Street will also slightly relocate current bus stops. The metered parking lot in front of Northeast has been eliminated.

The work on this project will be funded by a $230,000 grant from the state, Littlefield said.

Another project involving resurfacing of the gravel lot next to Skinner Hall and opposite from Hasbrouck, as well as the nearby section of Stockbridge Road, was completed this summer.

A water main break in front of NOPE is currently being repaired as well Littlefield said.

This project includes repair and installment of a sidewalk from the Graduate Research Center to the Fine Arts Center, relocation of the access drive to the Infirmary Parking Lot from Stockbridge Road to Infirmary Road and repairs to Stockbridge Road at the intersection of Clark Hill Road, near the Central Residential Area. Litlefield said the latter job has been completed.

Woodwork in dining commons wins architectural award

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Correspondent

Worcester Dining Common's tambour oak paneling and columns, installed during the summer of 1981, have been recognized by the Architectural Woodwork Institute's award of excellence.

The Architectural Woodwork Institute announced its award of excellence will go to the University of Massachusetts for "utilizing architectural woodwork with an innovative flair," in the Worcester Dining Common, according to a press release issued last week by J.A. Wright and Co., the manufacturer of the woodwork.

Jon A. Wright, president of J.A. Wright and Co., said he is "pleased to be part of the team" that planned, manufactured and installed the woodwork.

He added that the award is being presented to UMass, the owner of the project, for "having the foresight to demand a high standard of excellence in the project."

Most of the reaction to the woodwork has been favorable.

"It brings a homey, casual feeling to the D.C.," senior Jane Brenton of Winchester said.

"The color of the wood gives off a warm feeling," said freshman Ted White of Greenfield. "It makes it seem like less of an impersonal place."

"The paneling makes the D.C. look more like my kitchen at home," freshman engineering major Audrey Kiethe of Lawrence said.

Assistant director of Food Services Dick Rossi said, "It looks great, it gives the place a tremendous atmosphere."

"The award was presented in an ongoing program to

WMUA Women's Affairs Show to examine women's issues

By MARILYN LENTZ
Collegian Correspondent

Educating men and women of the community about women's issues and struggles is the goal of the Women's Affairs Show on the student-run radio station, WMUA (91.1 FM), according to the new director of the program.

Lisa Gonslaves, a senior journalism/communications major, was appointed by the managing board of WMUA at the beginning of September after the previous director, Michelle Murray, was appointed station program manager.

"The public needs to be educated about women's issues," Gonslaves said. "And WMUA needs to be educated as well as the community."

The Women's Affairs Show began last semester as an outgrowth of the ten-year-old Women's Media Project, a weekly three-hour program featuring female musicians and vocalists, said Murray, a senior Social Thought and Political Economy major and former director of the program.

"I wanted to try to recruit women to the station so they would have broadcast and production experience and also I wanted to expand women's programming so it would be more than three hours a week," Murray said. In recent months, the ratio of women to men has improved, she said.

Sexual harassment and other issues of relevance to women were aired on the program last spring, said Murray. Topics this semester will include women in prison and women in sports, as well as violence against women, said Gonslaves.

Gonslaves said she hopes the show will also appeal to men. "Men should feel welcome to listen. It will be difficult to get men to listen, but we will be covering topics we hope everyone will be interested in. I hope the men will benefit weekly three-hour program featuring female musicians as well as the women," Gonslaves said.

Gonslaves said the first Women's Affair Show this semester will be aired on September 22. Its focus wil be on the UMass Everywoman's Center, which offers resources and referral services. The program will include an interview with Ruth Wekes-Washington, the first black director of the center.

The program, which airs at 6 p.m. every other Wednesday, will be successful if there is a lot of audience participation Gonslaves said. Program ideas and interested women from the campus community are needed to help program the show.

"It's basically a new show. Last semester they did a few things with the show but there was never enough people. If there is a lot of interest, I'm sure the show will be good," Gonslaves said.

Theatre Guild offers variety of experiences to 5-Colleges

By PAULA HOYT
Collegian Correspondent

For students interested in acting, costume design, carpentry, play production, parties or trips to New York, the University of Massachusetts Theater Guild is the club to join.

"The Guild offers hands on experience and immediate training for many more majors than just theater," said Larry Cox, publicity director and past president of the Guild.

The club, an established Recognized Student Organization (RSO), presented major full cast productions of the musicals "Sugar" and "Pippin" last season, and "Jesus Christ Superstar" the previous spring.

The Guild is beginning its 48th season this semester with a November production of the musical comedy "Seesaw".

The Guild Board welcomes all students interested in any aspect of theater who are willing to train and contribute time for productions. "It serves as a type of internship for students," Cox said.

There are open staff positions for advertisers, set and costume designers, music directors, carpenters, and production assistants, as well as performers for upcoming productions.

An outdoor production of "Godspell" in Southwest last spring was an experimental performance which proved to be a great success. "Godspell helped to bring theater to people who were never exposed to it," Cox said.

"Our goal is to do theater that is educational, but also entertaining and appealing to students."

Two outdoor shows for all five residential areas are being scheduled for the coming season. A small show in Hampden Dining Commons in December, and a rock oriented musical in May are tentatively planned.

The major musical productions are only a part of the year's events for Guild members. Promotional slideshows and parties, charity functions and a day trip to New York are currently being discussed.

Auditions for "Seesaw" are open to all Five College students, and are being held at 7:00 p.m., September 20 and 21 in Campus Center, room 101.

Anyone interested in further information about the UMass Music Theater Guild should contact the Guild office in 415 Student Union.

Movie on multinational corporations tonight

The film "Controlling Interests — The World of the Multinational Corporations" will be shown tonight (Thursday) at 7:30 p.m. in Machmer room W-23.

The film analyzes the links between increasing poverty and oppression in other countries and the growing unemployment in the U.S. The roles of giant multi-national corporations are critically evaluated in locations such as Chile, Brazil, and even Greenfield, MA. Candid interviews with top corporate executives and government officials reveal that the basis of government policy is to insure a stable and "free" investment climate.

recognize outstanding achievement in completion of interior or exterior design projects," J.A. Wright and Co. said.

Stramese Corporation of Northampton installed the woodwork as part of the renovation of the Worcester Dining Commons last summer, said director of Food Services at UMass Marie Cappadonna.

Ruth Shives and Williams, Inc., of Amherst, was the architect of the project that included renovation of three rooms in the 28-year old building, Cappadonna said.

One Food Service worker said it made the D.C. look much more cheerful. "It is the difference between night and day," she said.

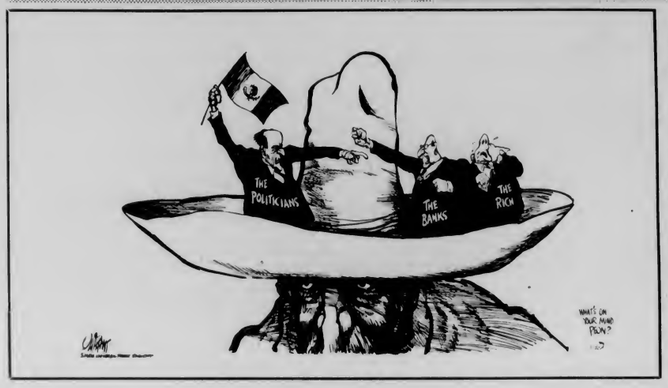
EDITORIAL/OPINION



The Drake: dull replaces decadent

Listen, I'm in a real hurry so I've got to make this quick.

I'm sure you're all anxious to hear this editorialist's personal interpretations of our common experience of rematriculation. Otherwise why would the student body be slackening its collective jaw, pausing amidst beef steak specials and chicken cutlets to ponder, peruse and perspire over its Massachusetts Daily Collegian? Why, but to lend salivary creedence to the meat of this editorialist's resume? Well, I know you've all got much more important things to do, but please, friends, U'mies, others, lend me the movement of your eyes long enough to justify the setting of this print.

But they have improved this cavity of alcoholic refuge! They have altered the ceiling of this earthly garden of few lights! Like reckless maids armed with SOS pads in the Sistene Chapel, these untutored repairmen have 'improved' upon the Drake's unlofty rafters. New plaster and new pipes: these to save the virginal brows of uninitiated tourists from learning the true meaning of an admonition to bow one's head in a place of worship!

This, I feel is one of the major issues we must address while here in Amherst this fall, the restoration of the Drake to its former condition, and the establishment of provisions for the further benevolent deterioration of this, our hindmost monument.

But in the meantime I'm in a real hurry to get to sleep; I've got a class early tomorrow afternoon.

Ralph C. Hybels

We have before us an arduous task dear friends, the resumption of our school time duties. But enough of trivial, short term pursuits. Were you at the Drake Monday, or was it Tuesday night? Monday, it was Monday and it was happening. Downstairs you understand, none of this 'still able to climb steps' pretension. If you can still stumble, the downstairs will swallow you without a gurgle or belch. These are the subterranean depths of the social being, the large intestine of Amherst, where the beef flows with urinary expediency and conversation becomes effluvient with a regularity alarming to some yet comforting to all. Lax, the Drake is extra lax. Inhibitions are extruded at the door to float downstream with the rest of civilization's refuse.

Four years too long to wait

Now that the primary elections are over, Massachusetts can look to the general elections in November. But first, let us reflect on the former Democratic candidates for governor and look ahead to key races and questions awaiting us on the '82 ballots.

Four years ago the Massachusetts Democratic gubernatorial primary was considered a major factor in the country's rising conservative tide. Edward J. King, a staunch conservative who really had no right to call himself a Democrat, won in an upset victory over incumbent Michael S. Dukakis.

A recent indication that the pendulum is swinging back is seen in Tuesday's election results. Dukakis' victory may well have been a no confidence vote for Reaganomics. And since the voting margin was only four percent in the former governor's favor, the results can hardly be called a mandate. But this wasn't your average run of the mill primary race either.

King spent $2 million on a top notch advertising campaign. His TV ads featured a voice worthy of God himself telling the voters of Massachusetts the evils of Mike Dukakis. The ads were convincing and comforting to the less sophisticated voter who might not be so politically oriented. This is where King hoped to derive his strength.

Conversely the Dukakis camp made mistakes. There was the sex tape scandal in July where Dukakis campaign manager John Sasso played an edited version of a King radio ad describing Jody King's bout with polio to two Boston Globe reporters. In the ad, King's wife said about her rehabilitation, "Sometimes I didn't want to do it, but Ed said 'You don't tell an ex-Baltimore Colt that you don't want to do it.'" One doesn't need an overly creative imagination to realize the possibilities that quote made available.

The King camp immediately jumped on the story and made it a campaign issue. The timing was perfect because the polls were beginning to show Dukakis's lead slowly dwindling. In all, the King camp was almost able to make the voters forget the governor's abysmal record with their fantastic media campaign. In fact if King had won, his campaign would have deserved to have been called one of the most ingenious in political history. The fact that Dukakis' ad campaign had become lackadaisacal did not help his lead either.

But the voters didn't forget. College students didn't forget that it was King who raised the drinking age. This drastically altered weekend life at UMass and other Massachusetts colleges and Universities by promoting anti-social behavior with students drinking in their rooms. Parents with children in public schools didn't forget that it was King who supported Proposition 2½, the tax cutting measure which resulted in teacher layoffs and cancellations of many sports programs. Environmentalists didn't forget that it was King who twice vetoed the bottle bill.

Massachusetts is fortunate because regardless of the eventual winner between Dukakis and GOP winner John W. Sears, better government is certain to follow. But that does not make November's election any less important.

Despite his integrity, John Sears would support Reaganomics, capital punishment, lower financial aid to public universities and the current Massachusetts state law on abortion which is the most repressive legislation in the country. Dukakis' beliefs are more in tune with assuring a decent quality of life for everyone, not just the rich.

Sears plans to launch an attack on corrupt government in order to win the November 2, general election. Against King, he'd have a valid point. Against Dukakis he'll be crying wolf.

That is why it is vital to Dukakis' chances that he already has King's endorsement. There will still be defectors to the Sears camp, but those King supporters who feel an allegiance to the Democratic party (believe it or not, there are many) will make Dukakis an assured winner.

The November elections should prove to be most interesting. Aside of the Dukakis-Sears matchup, there's Ted Kennedy running for re-election to his U.S. senate seat against arch-conservative Ray Shamie. Certainly Kennedy cannot lose, but if he gets less than 60 percent of the vote his perceived electability for president in 1984 could be damaged.

One election is over. Another election begins. So goes the political process.

Seta's death represents more than violence against women

To the Editor:

We are writing to clarify and correct several misquotes and inaccuracies printed in the article which appeared in the Tuesday, September 14 article entitled: "Third World Women's Coordinator: Violence Has Decreased."

As the Coordinator of the Third World Women's Task Force, I feel very strongly that the title of the article is both misleading and seriously misrepresentative of what I said. We wish to make it very clear that violence is not decreasing. Just because we haven't had violent deaths in three years doesn't mean that violence has curtailed. Violence takes many forms.

Furthermore, the article itself fails to speak to our purpose in holding the vigil. We held the vigil to commemorate Seta Rampersad, a Third World woman who was a Senior at UMass when she was found dead at the Motel 6 in Deerfield four years ago on September 13, 1978. The local newspapers announced her death in a one-inch article explaining that Seta had died of "natural causes," adding that she had "died with a smile on her face."

The facts surrounding Seta's death were unclear. However, it was only due to the efforts of the Third World Women's Task Force and other campus and community groups and individuals that any further investigation was pursued. The University played no role in the investigation and took no interest in bringing justice to Seta's case. Because of the forces which rallied around Seta's case and the tremendous amount of pressure which they managed to bring to bear on local officials, the D.A. was obliged to hold an inquest (an unprecedented measure in this area) which revealed that Seta's death involved criminal negligence, if not homicide.

While this tragedy may have occurred four years ago, it could happen again to anyone. It is unfortunate that it took a murder for people to be aware of the injustices and violence against Third World people in this area. For this reason, Seta represents the plight of Third World People, and she is a symbol of the continuing struggle against oppression.

We feel that Seta was a victim of circumstances particular to Third World people, especially women. Third World people everywhere are exploited, forced to settle for the lowest-paying jobs (often the only jobs available to them), and straddled with bad hours and poor working conditions. These injustices still exist today. Violence has not decreased, especially now, as the potential for violence grows only more stark and intensified under Reaganomics. Third World people are the hardest hit by unemployment and cutbacks in financial aid and public services.

Furthermore, racism, sexism and anti-semitism all exist as forms of violence and oppression on campus, as in the wider community. Recently a Third World woman was stopped by several white men as she was driving with her child on campus. The men harassed the woman, waving their arms threateningly and calling her "nigger." The University offers no protection from such abuse.

Seta Rampersad was found dead in the same year that Jose Pontes was killed and Jill Diekinson was raped - all Third World people, who as victims and students at UMass testify to and fit into the pattern of violence and oppression inflicted upon Third World people historically, both in this nation and around the world.

While the anniversary of Seta's death reminds us that we live in a country geared for the benefit of those who are either rich, white or male, it also strengthens us in our solidarity and struggle for our rights and for our very lives; whether at UMass, Boston, El Salvador, South Africa, or Palestine. Though we pause in spiritual vigil, we will not be silenced!

ALTAMONT REVISITED

By SARAH GALDSTON
Collegian Correspondent

The other morning at work, one of my co-workers was muttering about how much energy Jorma Kaukonen has in his guitar. Maybe it was because it was eight in the morning, but that had an incredibly absurd ring to it, as though Mr. Kaukonen's guitar was actually a Reichean organ box or some such thing. But that was actually a very apt description of the concert Tuesday night at the Hangar One. There was energy abounding. Jorma peeled off song after song like a manic stripper. While it was a sit-down crowd (with a few renegade dancers in the back) everybody was, you should pardon the expression, getting off on it. The audience was split pretty evenly between the serious music folks, who watched for every chord and finger spasm, and the Sixties retro crowd. I was even approached by someone outside who looked like his last stop on the time warp was Altamont.

Jorma played a long and varied two sets with enough old material to satisfy the nostalgia fiends. He led off with that old chestnut "Hesitation Blues" as well as newer material. All were done with thoughtfulness, vigor, and energy. Clearly Jorma is a performer and artist whose capacity for growth is commensurate with his talent.

Preston Reed was an engaging enough fellow who was almost as good as Leo Kotke, though he doesn't have as good a sense of humor, and an even worse voice.

Wailin' The Blues with Buddy Guy

By PETER BENTTINEN
Collegian Correspondent

This album is uncommon for a new release. It was recorded June 28, 1974 at the Montreux Jazz Festival in Switzerland and mixed by Bill Wyman of the Rolling Stones. My only question is why wasn't this made available sooner?

After the short introduction of Buddy and Junior along with Bill, an excellent album begins. The first song "Ah'w Baby/Everything Gonna Be Alright" proves that a good blues tune is a good blues tune no matter when it's recorded. The songs "How Can One Woman Be So Mean" and "When You See the Tears From My Eyes" give Buddy a chance to show his guitar prowess on side one.

Side two starts off with a slower paced song but the energy level remains high on "Ten Years Ago" written by Buddy Guy. On "Hoodoo Man Blues" his playing jumps to the forefront again with some mean guitar.

Are you a traditionalist? Do you shun away from the new and exciting? If you are, you'll be glad to hear then that Valley bands are practically the same as last year. If you aren't, careful meticulous searching will still result in some new and different music entertainment.

Skank to the Valleys number one reggae band, Loose Caboose tonite at Hanger One in Hadley or Stomp to the Stompers at the Rusty Nail on Rt. 47 in Hadley.

Spiritual wanderer Carlos Devadip Santana will bring his soulful guitar to the Curry Hicks Cage Friday night in what should be one of the finest UPC shows this year. Some tickets may still be available. Stormin' Norman and Suzy, a ragtime rhythm and blues duet will crank the crowd friday night at a Separate Entrance in South Dearfield. Norman and Suzy's rave reviewed act would probably be more enjoyable than drinking a case of Weidermans and listening to old records. Also Friday night, rock-blues artists The Shaboo All-Stars will be at Hanger One, Fountainhead at the Rusty Nail (for ultra heartys and metal-heads only), and Boston new-wave artists Face to Face will be at the Blue Wall (Santana tickets get you in for half price.)

Signal, with Michael Gregory Jackson plays at Joey D's Saturday night, while the all new supposedly transformed Fat will appear at the Rusty Nail. If the blitzkrieg of publicity material the "new Fat" is putting out is any indication of talent they might be worth checking out.

How's this for alternative experiences? Limbo Race will play Hanger One Sunday night as part of "The Living Video Experiment." Watch yourself dance while video art and computer graphics are plastered to your body.

The Jazz-boogie sounds of First Rate, Mitch Chakour, and Urban Renewal will be featured at the Rusty Nail Sunday night as part of a benefit for the LUPUS Foundation.

Mercer Ellington, son of the late great Duke Ellington will bring himself and the big band sound of the Duke's orchestra to the Fine Art Center Monday night. The Duke's band is a living jazz institution and should not be missed.

Get psyched for Jimmy Cliff and Peter Tosh.

Karate experts teaching at UMass, hope to administer presentations

By STEPHEN HOWE
Collegian Correspondent

Kimo Wall, a student of karate for 33 years, will be joining Dionisio Perez as a karate and self-defense instructor for the University of Massachusetts Okinawa Goju Ryu Karate Club this semester.

Wall began practicing karate at the age of six in Hawaii. He has been teaching martial arts for 20 years, ten of which were spent with the United States Marine Corps.

During that time, Perez, the club's founder, was one of Wall's students. Last spring, Perez invited his former teacher to UMass to put on a karate demonstration as part of Latin Week.

The demonstration was so well received that Wall decided to remain at UMass the rest of the semester to give a karate weapons seminar.

This semester Wall will be teaching three karate lessons and two self defense classes along with heading the karate club with Perez.

Wall said he would like to see a unification of the different karate clubs across the campus.

"Karate is an art form that unites people from around the world," he said.

Wall said he would also like to have an annual week long festival, devoting one day to each of the five classical styles of karate.

The club offers a course in kobudo, the martial art of weaponry. Wall stressed that kobudo is a defensive art that has its origins in the simple farm implements used for defense by the peasants.

The coed Okinawa Goju Ryu Karate Club meets on Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays in Room 22 of NOPE gym.

Beginners and new members are welcome.

Karate expert Kimo Wall has joined the staff of UMass Okinawa Goju Ryu Karate Club after last spring's well received demonstration. Wall has been studying his style for 33 years.

Black Affairs

A once secure rank now faces a New Poverty

By NORMAN HILL
A Philip Randolph Institute

At three in the afternoon New York's streets seem more crowded than in summers past. One has the impression, though, that it is more than the oppressive heat that is responsible for the mostly young crowds which appear to coexist in idleness with the city's constant bustle of cars and trucks and the unending flow of executives in pinstripes. Walking the city's streets one is, likewise, barraged by an almost unrelenting stream of panhandlers, three-card monte dealers and shopping bag ladies.

Casual observations do not tell us everything about the state of the city nor about this country's economy. But they do give a sense of where we are as we mark the eighteenth month of the Reagan Administration's term in office.

First-hand observations are often an unreliable way of detecting social trends. But sober statistics seem to confirm what one sees in the streets. A grim consensus among economists and social scientists is developing concerning an upswing in poverty unprecedented in the post-war era.

The new poverty is in large measure the result of the recession which has gripped our country for well over two years. It is likewise a product of the ideologically doctrinaire fiscal policies pursued by the Reagan Administration. In 1982, the experts ominously agree, the ranks of our country's poor will swell by an additional four million Americans, a disproportionate number ofwhom will be black.

The net effect of this trend is that by the end of the Reagan Administration's term in office, poverty in America will, very likely, climb to the levels of the early 1960's, i.e. to the levels before our nation waged its War on Poverty and before the introduction of the Great Society programs.

In this context, national policy must be geared toward maintaining an adequate ranks of the poor are different from their predecessors. Many were not born into poverty. Many had experienced steady incomes and had proven themselves in the world of work. A significant number of the new poor are blue collar families which once enjoyed a decent standard of living but have been hurt severely by the decline in jobs in heavy industry. Steelworkers and autoworkers, who several years ago were looking toward a life of hard work, but with just reward, are today confronted by the spectre of repossessions, defaults on mortgages, poverty, and a life with little or no promise.

In 1978 30.6 percent of black American were to be found among the ranks of the poor and indigent. In 1981 the figure stood at 34.2 percent. By the end of 1982, a year in which President Reagan promised economic growth and unparalleled prosperity, the percentage of black poor is expected to top 37 percent. Overall, the percentage of Americans, black and white, below the poverty level may reach 17 percent.

industrial base and providing retraining to equip unemployed industrial workers with the skills necessary to make the transition to such growth areas as high technology. But the Reagan administration, with its cuts in aid to education and vocational training, precludes any such constructive approach. It is this failure which is at the root of the mounting numbers of new human casualties who have become the victims of Reaganomics.

Our nation has prided itself on its commitment to social and economic progress. But the trends of the last two years suggest something very disturbing. Our country is moving backward, as differences between rich and poor are becoming ever sharper.

The ambitious social programs adopted during the Kennedy and Johnson years were not without blemish. Certainly there were some failures among the initiatives in the ambitious social agenda that was adopted. However, the overall effects of government policy served to redistribute income in a way that alleviated suffering and provided greater opportunities for the disadvantaged. Government was perceived to be on the side of working people and of the poor. Today, under the Reagan Administration, government is perceived to be the ally of the rich and powerful. This fundamental perception is axharmful as the gutting of any single program or the reduction in force in any single government agency.

Dedicated advocates of civil rights and economic justice have an urgent task: to motivate the poor, and particularly the victims of the new poverty to participate as never before in the electoral process to make November 1982 a referendum on the failures of the Reagan Administration's brand of economic and social policy. Yet although one must be confident and hopeful about reversing our government's temporary abandonment of compassion, one cannot help but sense the despair and frustration that is out there in the streets.

Black Harvard law-grads unfair

By BAYARD RUSTIN

According to a recent report in the New York Times, the Harvard Black Law Student Coalition and the Harvard Third World Coalition are calling for a boycott of a Harvard Law School course on race and legal issues because that course will, in part, be taught by a white civil rights lawyer. The lawyer in question is Mr. Jack Greenberg, executive director of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund.

The leaders of the boycott are protesting Jack Greenberg's appointment for two reasons. Because he is white, the students believe that Mr. Greenberg, is, in the words of the Third World Coalition, unable to "identify and empathize with the social, cultural, economic, and political experiences of the third world communities." Secondly, the students are opposed to Mr. Greenberg's serving as director of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, again presumably because he is not black.

The objection to Mr. Greenberg's role in teaching the Harvard course and to heading the Legal Defense Fund simply because he is white amounts to nothing more than blatant racism, i.e. the denial of a person's right to pursue certain activities solely on account of his race. Blacks, as victims of racial discrimination, should be the first to reject the view that race can disqualify one from any particular pursuit.

Anyone who objectively examines the record will conclude that Jack Greenberg is eminently qualified both to teach civil rights law and to direct an important civil rights organization. Indeed, during his twenty years as head of the Legal Defense Fund, Mr. Greenberg has shown himself to be one of our country's most effective fighters for racial justice and civil rights. Over the years he has directly participated in many of the landmark civil rights victories which have been won in our nation's courts.

What, then, one might ask, has provoked the militant protest of Harvard Law School's young blacks? Today, black law students at Harvard feel frustration at the fact that their less privileged counterparts in the ghetto are suffering unemployment rates approaching fifty percent. They feel great unease over the current administration's callous disregard for such matters as equal employment opportunity. They are angry at what they rightly perceive as an abandonment by the federal government of its legitimate role as a leading advocate of civil rights. In this context it is entirely understandable that these students would seek to make their voices heard. It is regrettable, however, that their militancy and sense of social responsibility manifests itself in this fundamentally destructive and irresponsible way.

Harvard's young blacks are pursuing their education not only as a result of their abilities, but also as a consequence of the opportunities opened to them by the civil rights battles waged both inside and outside the courts. It is ironic — indeed perhaps tragic — that they would vent their rage on Jack Greenberg, a talented and sensitive man who has contributed in no small measure to the freedom anddignity of young black Americans.

There is something else underlying the black protest at Harvard. It is the mistaken view that, somehow, the issue of civil rights is an issue which is exclusively black. Nothing could be further from the truth, Civil Rights is an issue of universal significance and, as such, should be important to all Americans. Civil rights, moreover, is an area in which progress cannot be attained without the building of a strong and wide-ranging coalition of blacks and whites, Christians and Jews. Blacks, despite their large numbers, constitute a minority in American life. They cannot achieve progress by going it alone. Attacks such as the one against Jack Greenberg may have the harmful effect of discouraging idealistic whites from participating fully in the battles for civil rights and social justice.

We don't need to worry about Jack Greenberg. He will not be discouraged and his organization will continue to make a contribution to the advancement of racial justice and human rights. We have more cause to worry about the leaders of the Harvard Black Student Coalition. Unless they change their perspectives they will be ill equipped to serve the cause of civil rights, a cause which their recent actions have served to undermine.

Floyd is on top once again

PINEHURST, N.C. (AP) — Ray Floyd, stubbornly struggling for golf's money-winning lead, hopes to make up some lost ground this week in the swan song of the Hall of Fame Classic.

The tournament, on the famed No.2 course at the Pinehurst Country Club, has been a fixture of the PGA Tour for the past 10 years but is not on the schedule next season.

It will be replaced by a $1 million, five-day event in Las Vegas in 1983.

"It's just a matter of economics," one local official said of the demise of the tournament that has been held since 1973 in a little resort village in the Carolina sandhill country.

"We really have to scrape the bottom of the barrel to come up with a $250,000 purse," said the official who asked his name not be used. "With (Commissioner Deane) Beman's announcement that the Tour will be going to a $400,000 or $500,000 minimum for its purses in the next few years, we just don't have a chance."

And, while Floyd hopes to close in on the money-winning lead, he has no chance of taking the No.1 spot.

The PGA champion, with $386,809, is second to leading Craig Staaler at $441,301. Staaler is not competing in the event that begins Thursday.

Volleyball hosts tourney Saturday

By GERRY DESIMAS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team may not have the experience that coach Elaine Sortino would like to have heading into the season, but where they lack in experience, they excel in hustle and enthusiasm.

UMass opens their 1982 season by hosting the UMass Invitational on Friday and Saturday in Boyden Gym.

This year's edition of the volleyball team is young. Six of the 12 varsity players are freshmen and four are sophomores. Senior Patty Philbin, "the hitting franchise" according to Sortino, will be a key to the team this year. Philbin, who is back for her third season, is also being joined by returning spikers Karen Gottesmen, Patty Grant, Kirsten Smith and Julie McMurtrie.

Success this season will depend on the play of Philbin and how quickly the freshmen jell together.

"I'm not really sure what to expect this year," said Sortino." But this team is very spunky and agressive. They really hustle."

Part of the game plan will be to get the ball to Philbin. The senior stands at 5'10", has a great vertical jump that enables her to jump up and spike the ball over most blockers. Gottesmen and Grant will have to pitch in with good set-ups for Philbin.

And if the freshmen can hold their own in terms of blocking and passing, it could be a promising season for the Minutewomen. Sally Mahar heads up the new frosh on a team which also includes high jumpers Leslie Smith and Ann Rose. Sue Mudry should also see plenty of action.

"The team is younger than we expected," Sortino said. This year the team will be without the services of last year's captain and MVP, Joanne Siler, who broke her arm in a car accident. To help compensate, the defense is going to be important. Sortino feels that the defense looks to be very good. There will be more "going for the ball and hitting the floor."

Among the teams on the Massachusetts slate this fall are Boston College, MIT, Southern Connecticut and tournaments in Delaware and Maryland. But, before any of that, the Minutewomen host the UMass Invitational tomorrow and Saturday in Boyden gym.

Fifteen other teams, besides UM, will battle it out starting at 6:00 P.M. Play on Saturday will run from 9:00 A.M. to about 5:00.

Collegian Player-of-the-Game

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

It is always hard to pick a player-of-the-game when a team is able to defeat a team by a score of 25-3. Just about every player must perform well in order to have a victory margin like that.

The defense, though it did bend at times, never broke and any defensive unit which does not allow a touchdown during the course of a game should be commended.

Likewise, an offensive line that clears the way for 387 yards on the ground during what amounted to a clinic in ball control football, also deserves its share of praise.

And quarterback Dean Pocevich's nine completions (7 for 7 throwing in the second half) combined with a record breaking 147 yard game for tailback Garry Pearson should be acclaimed as a spectacular afternoon of play.

But, this week, the player-of-the-game award goes to "the other running back."

This past Saturday "the other running back" did just about everything. When he wasn't running decoy dives for Pearson, he was running in front of him, often smolder smothering one lineback or another as Pearson dodged around him and gathered in a few more yards.

And when he wasn't doing either of these things, tri-captain Tom Murray was picking up 102 yards on 17 carries. Most of those carries, it should be noted, were bruising dives up the middle that he busted through and gained yardage that dives are not designed to get.

Critics will point out that the 6'1" 210 pound senior did fumble the football into the end some and kill a long drive for the Minutemen, but real fans will also remember that the ball came lose as Murray was putting forth a second effort to reach the goal line amidst a pack of West Chester defenders.

This past Saturday, Tom Murray was not "the other running back". He was Tom Murray, 100 yard gainer, captain and Collegian player-of-the-game.

Kimball's NFL debut gets broken

By DAN LEBERFELD
Collegian Corresponent

Sunday September 14, 1982 had to be Bruce Kimball's biggest day in a football uniform. For four years he had been waiting for the shot to start for an NFL team and on this day he was going to get it.

Commentary

Kimball finished up his glorious career at UMass in 1978. He was the only two time All-American in the school's history and was considered by many to be the best offensive lineman the Minutemen ever produced. With this background, a pro career seemed imminent. It took him four long hard years to achieve this goal.

Kimball was drafted in the seventh round of the April 1978 college draft by the Pittsburgh Steelers but failed to stick with the squad. From there he signed on with the Toronto Argonauts of the Canadian Football League.

In his two years of CFL ball he established himself as one of the best offensive linemen in that league.

In 1981 he came back to the United States and tried out with the New York Giants. He injured himself and spent the entire season on the injured reserve list. In 1982 he came back in great shape and made the team and proceeded to beat out long time starting right guard J.T. Turner.

The Giants won the toss last Sunday and elected to receive. The ball was returned to the 22 yard line. Kimball and the rest of the Giants starting unit took the field and the UMass grad's four year struggle had finally paid off, he was starting in the NFL.

Giant running back Leon Perry ran for a short gain on the first play of the game and there was a man down on the field. CBS television announcers Frank Gliecer and John Madden tried to figure out who it is. "It looks like number 63 John," said Glieber. "I think thats Bruce Kimball, the first year player out of the University of Massachusetts. What a shame that is, the kid finally gets his break and he gets hurt on the first play of the game," said Madden.

Yes he got hurt on the first play of the season. The injury he sustained was a broken leg and he will be out for four to six weeks. J.T. Turner now has his job back due to default, but he better watch out because in six weeks the Minuteman makes his return.

The University of Massachusetts over the years, has established itself as one of the outstanding football programs in the East. They always have a solid team that seems to finish at the top of the Yankee Conference.

One aspect of the team that has been evident over the years is that the team wins as a team and not on the back of one or two superstars. This is a fine trait to have, but it is no good for a player with pro aspirations. Players in this type of team situation have a hard time being noticed by pro scouts.

The Minutemen only have two players on NFL rosters right now and both players linebacker Joe Mclaughlin and offensive guard Bruce Kimball are on the injury list for the Giants. Don't be alarmed by this, Minutemen fans, because the future looks good for several players on the squad this year. .

Garry Pearson is one of the top 20 running backs in the country and should be drafted fairly high in next April's draft. New England Patriot scouts were at the West Chester State game last Saturday watching Pearson run for 147 yards and break the UMass all-purpose rushing record.

Defensive backs Dwayne Lopes also has a shot at the pros if he continues to play like he did against West Chester. Junior Defensive back All-American Grady Fuller has a great chance of being drafted in 1983. He has a good size (6'2" 190 pounds) and great football instincts. So you see times could be changing with UMass players and the pros.

Former UMass Quarterback Greg Laundry has found new life for himself in the new pro football league the USFL (United States Football League). George Allen's Chicago Blitz have signed the 37 year old veteran to a multi-year contract. The trend in the new league so far has been to sign old veteran quarterbacks to contracts. Another example of this is the Boston Brakers signing former Kansas City Chief Quarterback 38 year old Mike Livingston to a contract.

University of Massachusetts President David C. Knapp outlines plans for next year-and-a-half to Faculty Senate yesterday afternoon.

Knapp announces five-point program

By PAUL BELVAL
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts President David C. Knapp yesterday told the Faculty Senate he wants to see the school place a greater emphasis on the areas of high technology, outside corporate funding, and faculty.

In a five point plan outlining his goals for the University for the next eighteen months, Knapp said UMass must concentrate on the areas of engineering, computer science, and hard sciences; attract more money from private sources; maintain and augment the quality of the faculty; work more closely with high schools; and make education more accessible to people.

Knapp said he wants the school to be "matched with the needs of the state's economy."

This means developing areas of high technology like engineering, computer science, and "pure sciences" such as botany and zoology because these are the fields most in demand in Massachusetts, he said.

"UMass is in a unique position to offer training in the areas needed for the development of the Commonwealth," he said.

Knapp said he also plans to launch a campaign to attract more donations from the private sector for the University. He said by doing this, "Massachusetts could get more for its education dollar." He said these gifts could either be money or hardware. Both the Wang and Prime computer corporations recently donated computer equipment to UMass.

Inorder to "maintain and augment the quality of the faculty," Knapp said he has designed a three to five year capital outlay project to improve the appearance of the campus so it will be more attractove to professors the school is trying to recruit.

Knapp said he plans to increase the quality of students in UMass by working closely with secondary schools around the state to improve the quality of the education they give their students.

"We should provide leadership in overcoming the crisis in secondary education," he said.

To do this, Knapp has hired Dr. Robert Schwartz, formerly a member of the National Education Council, to serve as a special assistant working with the Boston Public Schools. He has also established a two campus working group to assess the admissions and testing procedures and find ways to improve these processes.

campus working group to assess the admissions and testing procedures and find ways to improve these processes.

Knapp said the role of a state university is more than just providing an education to those involved in formal undergraduate training.

"We need to bring the classroom to more of the people who need it," he said.

Speaking specifically of older students, Knapp said we want to see a continued emphasis placed on the Graduate and Continuing Education programs.

However, Knapp said his plan can happen only if the federal government continues to provide financial aid to the University.

"All of this rests on one caveat," Knapp said. "That is that the withering away of aid for higher education by the federal government cease."

Knapp said financially, the school is still in good condition, though.

"We have emerged from the post Proposition 2½ days as a healthy University," he said. "We are healthier now than ever before."

Knapp also emphasized the place of public higher education in the future of the state.

"Education is vital to this knowledge intensive society we call Massachusetts," he said. "We have becom the envy of states with sagging economies. We have committed ourselves to securing the place of Massachusetts in the knowledge society."

Sexual harassment suit filed against Fitzwilly's

By CRIS SCHUSTER
Collegian Staff

A sexual harassment suit was filed against Fitzwilly's Restaurant in Northampton by the University of Massachusetts Legal Services Office (LSO) on behalf of a UMass student last week.

The lawsuit was filed in the U.S. District Court for $250,000 by Miriam Domonique, who was fired last March from Fitzwilly's, where she was employed as a waitress. Loss of wages, emotional distress, and other injuries are cited in the suit as causes for the compensation.

Domonique was subjected to unsolicited physical contacts of a sexual nature, sexual leers, intimidation, and verbal propositions by her immediate supervisor, Richard Burbine, according to Domonique was subjected to unsolicited physical contacts of a sexual nature, sexual leers, intimidation, and verbal propositions by her immediate supervisor, Richard Burbine, according to the suit.

"Of course we deny all the allegations," said Ray Callahan, manager of Fitzwilly's Restaurant. "She was fired because she stole an article that did not belong to her."

Callahan refused to specify the alleged stolen article, however, saying, "I think I told you more than I should have."

Roger Kirwood, the owner of Fitzwilly's said," She broke a company policy." Asked to elaborate, he said," No, I won't tell you the policy. I don't feel I want to tell you."

Kirwood denied having any knowledge of what the suit stated, but said he intends to send someone to the press conference scheduled for today by LSO to learn of the allegations. However, he said he will not send his lawyers to the press conference.

"Tomorrow is not a hearing, not a trial. It's just a press conference," Kirwood said. "We were not invited."

"If we are able to settle out of court to the satisfaction of our client, wewill," she said. "We won't have a trial for the sake of having a trial. We'll go to court only as a last resort."

In March 1982, Domonique filed complaints against Fitzwilly's with the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. Later that month she was fired for allegedly "breaking one of the rules of the handbook," Callahan said.

A waitress at Fitzwilly's, who asked not to be identified, said waitresses at the restaurant have been ordered not to talk to the press. A second waitress at Fitzwilly's, who asked not to be identified, said Domonique's former supervisor, Richard Burbine, is no longer employed by Fitzwilly's. She denied any knowledge to why he was no longer there. Callahan refused to comment on Burbine's employment status.

Diaz said the suit was sent out to be served last week, and Kirwood may not have received it yet.

Sears eyes King for endorsement

BOSTON — Republican gubernatorial nominee John Sears said yesterday it is possible his campaign can win the support of Democratic Gov. Edward J. King.

"I think we have a good, fighting chance...(and it's) possible to win over the governor himself," Sears said at a Republican unity session.

"Asked about King backing Sears in the final election, King's spokesman, Gerard Morris, responded, "We're going to explore that... I'm not ruling anything out at this point. The truth is the governor has not made a decision yet."

Morris said King will meet with the Democrat's nominee for governor in November, former Gov. Michael Dukakis, and with Sears early next week. King lost the nomination to Dukakis Tuesday after a bitter primary fight.

When asked about a Dukakis endorsement Wednesday, Morris had declined comment until next week, but said, "I just think he will be very gracious in defeat and very protective of the Democratic Party."

Sears said he had a "friendly" talk with King on Wednesday, and, "I would value his support." Sears predicted enormous pressure on King to support Dukakis.

The Republican candidate said he admired King's openness to business and his battle against crime.

At the unity session, Republican leaders said the Democratic Party is severely divided and King supporters will defect in large numbers to Sears.

Democrats had insisted the day before that they could present a united front and win in November.

State police to hire more women

BOSTON — Facing a federal sex discrimination lawsuit, Massachusetts agreed yesterday to guarantee that at least 20 percent of the people entering the state police training academy will be women.

The settlement filed in U.S. District Court here came after years of negotiation between the state attorney general's office and the U.S. Justice Department on how to increase the force's percentage of women, who held only 24 of 1,031 trooper positions as of last May, State Police Commissioner Frank J. Trabucco said.

The state police had already embarked on a campaign to increase the percentage of women on the force, Trabucco said. Twenty of the 100 trooper candidates in the July class at the Framingham training academy were women, he said.

But federal officials will monitor the state's hiring practices for the next five years to ensure that the 20 percent mark is attained, he said.

The agreement came several years after federal officials filed lawsuits against Massachusetts and many other states, charging sex discrimination in hiring state police.

"It is the expectations of the defendants and the United States that such non-discriminatory hiring will result in the selection of qualified women as state troopers in numbers approximating the proportion of qualfied female applicants available for hire under the program of recruitment," the agreement said.

Israel reinvades sections of Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Israeli armored forces seized key areas of west Beirut yesterday after heavy fighting with PLO guerrillas and Lebanese leftist militias. Lebanon called for urgent U.S. and United Nations intervention to force the Israelis to withdraw.

The State Department in Washington said there was "no justification" for the Israeli presence in west Beirut" and demanded "an immediate pullback."

Fierce fighting raged in two neighborhoods at nightfall as Israeli troops and tanks took over sections of west Beirut. But other areas reported that the firing had halted after battles that Lebanese police said left 31 Lebanese dead and 110 wounded.

West Beirut blacked out at sunset with an unexplained power failure. It could not be determined whether Israeli forces in Christian-populated east Beirut had cut off power supplies to the western sector as they did twice since the invasion of Lebanon on June 6.

The Israeli troops moved into the former PLO strongholds in west Beirut after the assassination of President-elect Bashir Gemayel Tuesday, saying that with Gemayel's death the Lebanese army lacked the leadership to maintain control of the sector.

The State Department said the thrust was a "clear violation of the cease-fire understanding" arranged by U.S. envoy Philip C. Habib that led to evacuation of the main body of Palestine Liberation Organiation fighters from west Beirut three weeks ago.

Lebanon's ambassador to the United Nations called for an urgent Security Council session on the Israeli foray, which began within hours of the assassination Tuesday evening of Gemayel.

Bashir's brother Amin was reported nominated by the Christian Phalange Party to run for president to succeed Elias Sarkis Sept. 23, but it was not known if Amin accepted or what the next step would be in Lebanon's constitutional crisis.

Humanities commitment emphasized by Knapp

By PAUL BELVAL
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts President David C. Knapp last night said his plan to place an emphasis on the areas of high technology at UMass does not mean the school will give up its commitment to the arts and humanities.

"The fact that one is paying attention to high technology does not mean one is abandoning the humanities," Knapp said.

Knapp said he is trying to find the middle ground between the needs of students interested in humanities and those of the high technology industries of the state.

"There is absolutely no reason why you can't have a balance between the arts and sciences and the professional fields," he said.

However, Knapp did admit he believes it is necessary for UMass to "help the state economy" by provided it with the needed trained professionals, and he said improving the quality of the engineering and computer science departments will accomplish this goal.

"The economy of the state is based on high technology," Knapp said. "That is the reason we are a stronger state economically than most other states. If we want to stay strong as a University, we have to keep up with the needs of the state. We have a basic obligation to the state."

Knapp said a development of the engineering and computer science departments should also help UMass' ability to raise money from the state.

"We're not going anywhere if all we say is 'Give us Money.' We have to make inputs into the society as a whole," he said. "We have to help the state economy. We have to demonstrate our worth to the state."

Knapp said another of his goals in soliciting more money for the school is to increase funds received from the private sector.

He said most state schools have raised more money from private interests than has UMass, but said he hopes to increase the amount of money coming from alumni and private corporations in the near future.

The University has already launched an engineering capital campaign which is attempting to raise money from alumni and private corporations for the engineering department.

Knapp maintained that these additional funds from the private sector will increase the amount of money the state is willing to give the university.

"Private giving usually inspires the state to give more," he said.

Knapp also said he thinks Joseph Duffy was a good choice to take over as chancellor of the Amherst campus.

"I'm very pleased that he has agreed to join us," he said. "He's got a combination of an interest in dealing with public issues and an understanding of public values."

Knapp said he thinks Duffy shares his concern for balancing student interest in arts and sciences with economic needs.

"He's got a good combination of an understanding of humanities and the national economy," he said.

Although Knapp refused to comment on how long he expects him to remain in his position as Chancellor, he said he thinks Duffy will be at UMass for a while.

"We asked no commitment in terms of time," he said. "There is an assumption that he will be around for a while. He is coming with a dedication to the chancellorship of the campus."

Knapp expressed his feelng that it is important for the state colleges and universities to begin working more closely with state high schools to improve the quality of students graduating from these schools.

"I'm not at all satisfied with the quality of young people coming out of the secondary schools," he said.

Knapp said he is starting a program to improve public high schools in Boston because it is notoriously the worst system in the state.

"If we can do it in Boston, we can do it anywhere else," he said.

Knapp said he plans to improve the Boston public school by redeveloping the curriculum, which he feels is outdated, retraining the teachers, and finding peopl on the state and college and university campuses who can help with his program.

Police to facilitate process of obtaining alcohol ID card

ByHANNAH HOSOM
Collegian Staff

Students with a Massachusetts driver's license are not required to get an alcohol identification card, the purpose of which is to identify those of legal drinking age who do not have a legally acceptable picture identification.

In order to obtain a Massachusetts alcohol identification card, an application must be filled out and taken to be signed by a police officer. Identification such as passports, other licenses and birth certificates may be used to have the application validated, according to Donald Robinson, Director of the Environmental Health and Safety at the University of Massachusetts, to clarify what was reported yesterday.

Robinson said the reason police will be in the Campus Center on Sept. 23 is to save anyone interested in the ID a trip to a police station. The application must then be taken to the Registry of Motor Vehicles at 401 King Street in Northampton. A $5 fee is necessary to have the application processed into a picture ID. The registry is open from 8:45 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

A spokesman for a local bar said bouncers will be checking ID's as they have always done. A Massachusetts state picture ID, whether a license or alcohol ID will be accepted unless the bouncer has reason to believe it has been tampered with. Any other ID may be accepted or rejected by the bouncer depending on whether he or she feels the person is of legal age.

Nuclear war relocation course postponed until next semester

By KEN LUNDBERG
Collegian Staff

Due to a lack of publicity in attracting an enrollment quota, a course entitled "Crisis Relocation" (Geography 591B) originally scheduled for the current semester at the University of Massachusetts will be offered next spring instead.

The professor for the course, Dr. Rutherford Platt, said although the course gained publicity through an earlier Collegian article, there was still too much going on the first week of school for students to be fully aware of the offering. As a result, he said, only six students signed up for it.

The course, in its first running at the University, will involve about 10 students with the issues of the crisis reloation concept — ranging from practical planning concerns to legal, moral and philosophical considerations.

"The next worse thing to nuclear way is trying to move 150 million people. That is a disaster in itself," Platt said.

"In the course we'll be looking at particulars that haven't occurred to federal and state officials," Platt said. "Just how can you make people go to a host community? How can you stop people from driving from targeted areas until they run out of gas?"

"Some evacuation plan is better than no plan," Platt said, "but a plan that won't work at all is no good because people will have a false belief, making them risk nuclear war."

The idea for the crisis relocation course, which is comprised of mostly field work and documenting, evolved last spring when plans for nuclear evacuation drawn up during the Carter Administration became fully publicized in Massachusetts.

Radioactive dumping to be studied

By JAMES SIMON
Associated Press

BOSTON — Federal researchers will launch a 10-day investigation next week to see if radioactive material dumped into Massachusetts Bay 25 years ago poses any threat to the marine environment, officials said yesterday.

The study will "address public and congressional concerns and...confirm our preliminary assessment that there is no signficant threat to the public health or environment from the disposal of radioactive waste," said Paul Keough, spokesman for the regional office of the Environmental Protection Agency.

The Antelope, a 165-foot ocean survey vessel, will depart Monday and examine five ocean sites, Keough said. The ship will provide some immediate test results, but most tests will take four to six months to complete, he said.

The EPA announced in fall 1980 that 1,008 containers of radioactive material were dumped in Massachusetts Bay, about 15 miles off the Boston coast, between 1952 and 1959. Officials said there was little likelihood that the radioactive waste remained lethal or poses a threat to the area seafood.

Ocean dumping of radioactive waste was a widespread practice at the time, officials said, and more than 300 potential dumping sites have been identified nationwide.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Her days at UMass are numbered

3 940997.
I first saw that number at freshman orientation. It meant nothing. Two months later, it still meant nothing. One month later, I realized that the student identification card was Amherst's answer to MasterCard.

3949997.
It was kind of hard to remember at first. People who could pass sixth grade math can also easily memorize a magic seven digit number. Mastering that numeral was a little harder for those of us who have the retentive memory of a one year old. Three months and seventy eight consultations later, I too could write down my ID number without checking my precious laminated card.

Mary Beth Hebert

3979997.
The ritual starts around 4:30 every afternoon. What did I do with my ID? Look in the backpack. Not there. On the desk. Not there either. Bring in a bulldozer and go through the rest of the room. Where could it be? Suddenly...a flash of inspiration. Quick! Dive into the closet and fish out yesterday's pants. Lo, the missing ID: passport to the culinary wonders of the dining commons.

Comes in handy at the Campus Center. That, and a fifty cent sticker will let all those who are old enough imbibe all the alcohol they want at the Blue Wall and the T.O.C. Possession of your identification card will also let you stand in line for an hour to cash a check. Not only will you get your money, but you get your picture taken too. These photos are sorted and then compiled by a near-sighted little old lady. Next, they are smuggled out of the Campus Center by a bogus yearbook photographer who takes them to his company where your worst picture is placed over your name in the "Index."

3979891.
Once the semester gets started, you'll find that it is of paramount importance to have an ID when trying to gain admittance to the leaning tower of Amherst. And while the magnetic strip on the back won't let you ring up a fortune at Bloomingdales, it will allow you to take out all kinds of books for free. And isn't knowledge better than five new pairs of Calvins?

3479891.
For the price of that invaluable number, plastered on a two dollar piece of plastic, we gain free admittance to football games in the fall and Spring Concert (or whatever they substitute for it this year) in the spring. Culture is at a discount for those with the Card, as those possessing it get reduced admission to see guests sponsored by the Distinguished Visitor's Program and performances at the Fine Arts Center.

3449891.
I'll never forget it.

Shamie set to spoil Ted?

The November elections approach, and Edward Kennedy's seat in the U.S. Senate appears as secure as ever.

Despite vows from the newly-nominated Republican candidate Raymond Shamie that he will offer genuine opposition, the GOP threat to the Senator still appears to be little more than a political footnote. Kennedy's support is too broad, his organization too slick, and his family too rich for any Republican, outsider or insider, to stand much of a chance. That is the reality. More formidable and well-known Republicans than Shamie have understood that since the late 1960s.

Roger Atwood

"Massachusetts Republicans with statewide experience and electoral ambitions have made it clear that they have no interest in what they consider an impossible assignment," said the Christian Science Monitor earlier this year. Kennedy secured 68 percent of the vote in 1976, the Monitor noted.

Still, Shamie battles on like the Little Engine That Could. The hubris of his campaign may endear him to Republicans. To the rest of us, he just looks kind of quaint.

The candidacy of Shamie presents an attractive idea to the GOP leadership. If by some fluke he should win, the Republicans have an instantly-famous superstar. In the more likely event of his defeat, Shamie can simply fade back into the political obscurity from whence he came. Nothing gained, nothing lost. And Shamie has already dug deep into his own pocket to finance full-page newspaper ads and radio spots — leaving plenty of money for the GOP to spend in the governor's race. So, the Republicans are in the paradoxical position of having found the ideal candidate for an all-but-certain defeat.

Revealingly, Shamie has claimed that he can at least hold to a minimum Kennedy's campaigning for other liberals in other states, and even spoil his chances for the 1984 presidential nomination. Whether this means, Shamie has already conceded the race is unimportant. His admissions signify that he is on Kennedy's wavelength — 1984. If Shamie can take a dozen points out of Kennedy's lead over 1976, he could seriously wound the Senator's support vis-a-vis 1984. The damage will be twofold if he can keep Kennedy from collecting political I.O.U.'s in the Midwest by campaigning for his Senate colleagues.

Kennedy, as well, undoubtedly has the national electorate in mind as he campaigns across the Bay State. Like the other 1984 presidential hopefuls, Kennedy must prove this year that he can win and win big. Anything less than a total victory will undermine his support within the party. If Shamie can prevent that total victory, the GOP may turn out to be the real victor.

White Women — victims of sexism, but not racism

To the Editor:

I am writing in conjunction with Panna Putnam ("Seta's death represents more than violence against women"), though we felt that individual letters would be appropriate. We are both writing out of concern over the recent article addressing the Monday night vigil held in commemoration of Seta Rampersad, and I hope that my letter will be read in the broader context of Panna's.

In the article, I am quoted as saying: "It's hard being a white female. I feel like I couldn't say I understood or could not relate to Seta's case because I'm not a Third World woman." Though I trust that the reporter did not deliberately misquote me, I feel compelled to correct what she has printed, and address some of the issues such a statement would raise. Though unintentional, I think her misinterpretation of what I said to her has serious and unfortunate repercussions.

Many feminists are keenly aware of what we're up against in a patriarchal society. However, white feminists are not dealt the double violence of racism, and many of us remain insensate to the particular oppression which Third World women suffer.

"Skin privilege" is a demented form of power with which every white person is endowed, even women. Skin privilege is by no means empowering, however, as it is a form of domination and gained at the expense of another's powerlessness.

The issue of racism is seldom adequately dealt with in the Women's Movement. I feel that it is the particular responsibility of white feminists to confront our own racism and the origins of our skin privilege. The reality of racism to Third World women is too often skirted over. Let us never be accurately quoted as offering the racist and irresponsible disclaimer that we "can't relate...because we are not Third World women."

Trailers

by Andy Gordon

Jason Miller, who played Karras, the priest, in The Exorcist, will direct the film version of his Broadway show, That Championship Season, which will be filmed in New York. The film will Star Bruce Dern, Stacy Keach, Robert Mitchum, Martin Sheen and Paul Sorvino. Miller will write the screenplay and will probably play an integral part in the editing.

Director Samual Fuller comments on the evils of racism with his real-life horror film White Dog, which will be released in the coming months. The film stars Kristy McNicol as a girl who finds a stray dog. As it turns out, the dog was raised by a bigot who trained it to attack black people. Fuller maintains that such dogs do exist and he is using them as a metaphor in denouncing racism.

If you thought a film version of Superman was stretching it, wait until you hear this; production will start this winter on The Batman, based on the comic and subsequent t.v. series. Two unknowns, not yet chosen, will play the title character and his sidekick and the villains will be played by celebrities in cameo roles. A director has not yet been signed but Tom Manciewicz will write the screenplay. The film will take place in the 80's. Gotham City will be Chicago.

While we're on the subject of implausibility, how about Jaws of Satan, with Fritz Weaver as an alcoholic priest threatened by a king cobra snake possessed by the devil. Or Kill or Be Killed III (bummer, I missed part II)

A handful of comedies have begun filming. Mel Brooks will turn his short-lived t.v. series, When Things were Rotten, into a full length film titled Robin Hood. He will also write, direct and star in a remake of the Jack Benny classic, To Be or Not to Be, which will co-star Ann Bancroft. Set during World War II, the black comedy features Brooks as a theatrical director and Bancroft as his actress wife during the Nazi invasion of Poland.

Neil Simon is working on several new projects. Max Dugan Returns stars Jason Robards as an ex-con who shows up at his daughter's house with a million dollars in presents. Marsha Mason (who else?) plays the daughter, Donald Sutherland is her detective boyfriend and newcomer Matthew Broderick plays her son. Simon's Broadway musical, They're Playing Our Song, will be filmed this summer by director Robert Moore and The Lonely Guy will star Steve Martin.

National Lampoon, who made Animal House, are all set to release two new comedies: Class Reunion and Vacation 83, written by Lampoon staffer John Hughes. Meanwhile, they are reediting National Lampoon Goes to the Movies, which bombed so bad in 1981 that it was quickly pulled out of distribution. The new version will be re-released as Lampoon's Movie Madness. The humor magazine is also planning a long awaited sequel to Animal House, which will begin preproduction later this year.

Director Martin Ritt (The Front, Conrack) will finish filming Cross Creek this month. The film, a Christmas release, stars Mary Steenburgen in the lead, dramatic role.

Yet another 3D film is being prepared. Hot Heir will offer hot air balloons floating throught the local neighborhood theater. The Stunt Safety Council recently determined that one of the film stunts — a woman riding atop a balloon — was too dangerous and could not be filmed. They will use a dummy in her place.

Local Best Bet: The Wall, based on the Pink Floyd album, starts today at the Hampshire 4 Cinemas in the Hampshire mall. From all early accounts, the film is supposed to be visually and audibly incredible. Bob Geldof stars in the Alan Parker production. It will also play at midnignt.

Trailers Trivia: Sean Penn, who plays the valley boy Spicoli in Fast Times at Ridgemont High, played a dramatic role as a military cadet in what film? Answer to last week's question: "Yes, I'd love a cup of coffee" is the last line of Warren Beatty's Heaven Can Wait.

Steve Martin will star in Neil Simon's The Lonely Guy.

Punk Pretension

By PHIL PLANTE and DOUG MUISE
Collegian Staff

If the title "New Wave Film" conjures celluloid close-ups of Johnny Rotten's navel or grainy shots of Pattie Smith mumuring into a mike then perhaps you'd have been disappointed with the Pleasant St.'s New Wave Film Festival this Wednesday past. It seems the New Wave in rock music has little if any connection with the New Wave in film. The festival featured two rather obscure films:

Stilleto. There's a nice harsh exquisitely deadly ring to that title, isn't there? It aptly describes filmmaker Melvie Arsianian's 1972 experimental release — sharp, penetrating, evocative.

Our protagonist is Tina L' Hotsky — a real pot-boiler. Cinched into a tight, tapered skirt and sinister black pumps she's a shapely Marilyn Monroesque bomb-shell.

The plot, from what I could make out, takes the guise of a sort of demented detective drama. L' Hotsky's sister, it seems, wore a pair of cement sandals into the Hudson River and our heroine is determined to avenge Big Sis' death. L'Hotsky eventually tracks down the wretched refuse responsible for her sister's demise. But does she then turn him over to the proper authorities to await prosecution? What do you think? Anyway, she ends up making her point, so to speak, with deadly precision. Overall, a rather interesting if not somewhat confused piece of off-the-wall Noir.

Towers Open Fire

William Burroughs, author of such untraditional and unrestrictive novels as Naked Lunch and Ah Pook was Here orchestrates an all out assault on rationality and homogenized media Towers Open Fire.

Heroin addition, mysterious Mayan codices, and exploded and fragmented electronic information are all a part of Towers Open Fire and, like Burroughs' twisted life, stumble and squirm amidst a landscape of fear and mystery.

The mysterious Mayan codices which, played a central role in Ah Pook was Here are again present in Towers Open Fire. "Hide them away for ever and ever" mumble a pair of mutilated hands before the camera turns to a shot of Burroughs shooting up.

Dementedly edited shots of Burroughs climbing stairs, smoking cigarettes, and walking through New York set the stage for the start of Burroughs media misinformation war. As Burroughs shouts into a microphone "Towers open Fire!", loudspeakers mumble, then alternately scream, tape being played backwards, bits of radio news broadcast, flashing to half page of newspaper with sentences torn in half. Media anarchy and misinformation run rampant.

Mr. Burroughs is also a heroin addict.

Holy Cross to host Minuteman game

By KEVIN DELUCA
Collegian Correspondent

Given the recent history, the individual talent on each side, the respective opening game victories and the overall excellence of both football programs, UMass and New England area football fans are in for a treat this Saturday when the Minutemen travel to nearby Worcester to take on the Holy Cross Crusaders.

Although Holy Cross has a 15-14 edge in the overall series, which dates to 1897, UMass has won six of the last seven meetings between the two schools. However, even this statistic is misleading, as the last three contests have been decided in the closing minutes with an average of only three points separating the winner from the loser.

In the past two meetings the main difference has been UMass quarterback Dean Pecevich. Pecevich led the Minutemen to 17-13 and 13-10 victories in those games, with last year's triumph coming on the strength of a Pecevich touchdown pass with 50 seconds left in regulation.

Pecevich will not be the only star suiting up, however,as both teams are talent-laden.

The tough Holy Cross defense (they shutout UNH, 28-0, last week), led by defensive tackle Frank Mattiace and a good young secondary, will face a stiff challenge when they try to stop the powerful UMass running attack, led by All-American tailback Garry Pearson and fullback Tom Murray, both of whom rushed for over 100 yards in last week's season opening victory over West Chester State. When the Crusaders are on the offensive, the UMass defense, led by All-Americans Grady Fuller and Dwayne Lopes, who had two interceptions last week, will have to contend with the passing of first-year starting quarterback Peter Muldoon and the rushing of a fine running corps, consisting of Andy Clivie, Doug Pietrick and Mark Covington.

Overall, this Division 1-AA matchup has the makings of one of the finest and most important games in New England this fall, a fact which both coaches realize.

Second-year Holy Cross coach Rick Carter, who has revitalized the Crusader's football program, is looking forward to a difficult contest.

"I see UMass as a big test for our young team. They achieved a Division 1-AA top ten ranking last year and a victory for us this Saturday could have national significance," said Carter.

On the other side of the field, UMass coach Bob Pickett is quietly confident about Saturday.

Women's basketball is underway for 82-83

By GERRY deSIMAS

Work has already begun on the 1982-83 edition of the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team with tryouts ending in the first cut, yesterday in Boyden gym.

While the fall sports are just starting to get into full swing, head coach Mary Ann Ozdarski hoopsters are beginning to prepare for the winter season. Workouts will run all the way up to the start of the season.

Six players from last year's twelve will be missing from the UMass squad. Martha Ready and Sherry Collins graduated while ace shooter Cindy Clapp transfered to Harvard. Jackie and Gwen Jones and Nora Maldando did not go out to play this year.

For the players that survived the first cut, weight training, interval running (sprints), long distance running and an emphasis on basic basketball fundamentals will be part of practices up to the season opener, Nov. 23 against Holy Cross.

"All the players worked very hard for the past two days (tryouts)," Ozdarski said. "We're going to have a very young team this year. We will work extremely hard."

Ozdarski hopes to stress the fundamentals, teach her players to play under control and have sound defense in the next few weeks.

"The players were very enthusiastic," said Ozdarski.

The second cut, which will bring the size of the squad down to 12 players, will be made in a few weeks. A total of 24 players tried out for a spot on the team.

Celtic tickets

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Celtics announced Thursday that individual tickets for 1982-83 home games at Boston Garden will go on sale next Thursday, Sept. 23.

The National Basketball Association club said the Garden box office will open at 11 a.m. Only cash will be accepted as payment for the tickets. Only a limited number of tickets are available because of a heavy advance sale of season tickets.

Cable TV news

WASHINGTON (AP) — The NFLPA has signed a contract with Ted Turner's cable television superstation, WTBS, to stage a series of makeshift all-star games.

That plan, reported by sources to The Associated Press Wednesday night, calls for the union's nine-member executive committee to formally call a strike Monday afternoon, effective after that night's Green Bay Packers-New York Giants game and lasting until a new collective bargaining agreement is signed to replace the five-year pact that expired July 15.

Jack Donlan, executive director of the management council and the owners' chief negotiator, said the strike deadline was no surprise to him.

"This is totally consistent with what we have heard all along. The NFLPA has had a master plan to strike," Donlan said.

Television networks have made contingency plans to substitute college games and the Canadian Football League in event of an NFL strike.

Project Deep

It's not too late to join one of the many courses in SCUBA offered this semester by Project DEEP (Diving Education Extension Program). In addition to four evenings of Open Water Certification worth 2 GPE credits, DEEP also has an Advanced Diving course on the books - also worth 2 credits. Students participating in the Open Water course will make five introductory dives this fall in Rockport, Mass. while those taking the Advanced course will participate in at least 8 dives, concentrating on navigation, boat diving, deeper diving and aspects of commercial diving techniques.

Students may benefit if State Legislature passes four new laws

By KEVIN BOWE
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Legislature will reconvene today in a post-primary session to decide several matters that directly affect students at the University of Massachusetts.

Increased financial aid for students, student representation on the State Board of Regents and student representation on the UMass Building Authority which oversees all construction and repair of buildings on campus are the major lobbying priorities for the UMass Undergraduate Student Government Association, chairperson of the SGA Public Policy Committee, Sheila Sullivan said.

There is a "good chance" the Building Authority bill will be passed by the House of Representatives, but it would take an intense lobbying effort to successfully pass the other major pieces of legislation, Sullivan said.

"The Building Authority is the group responsible for overseeing the Campus Center and the dorms. A vast amount of money students pay goes into these (room and board) fees," chairperson of the SGA Rents and Fees Committee, Mitch Gaslin said. This committee is the student watchdog group, monitoring the University's trust fund system, he said.

A bill filed by Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst, that would increase state aid to students by an additional $28 million is expected to be brought up this session, Sullivan said. Under the proposed legislation a package of cigarettes would be taxed the 5 percent Massachusetts sales tax which it is currently exempt from. This extra revenue would be used for increased state scholarship aid, student loans and the creation of a state work/study program.

After receiving a favorable recommendation from the Joint Legislative Committee on taxation last spring, the bill is now in the State House of Representatives' Ways and Means Committee.

A bill to put a student representative on the Board of Regents also received a favorable recommendation from the Joint Education Committee last spring. Under the proposal the 27 student trustees representing all the public colleges and universities in the state would nominate three undergraduate students from which the Governor would chose one to serve on the Board of Regents for a one year term. term.

The bill is now in the State House of Representatives' Ways and Means Committee.

Wargamers battle for UMass tournament title

By MIKE FOLEY
Collegian Staff

It was a weekend of a thousand battles. Blood flowed. Bomb blasts, smoke and screams of terror filled the air in the worlds created in the minds of master gamers.

MASSCON '82, a tournament of board games, was held this weekend at the University of Massachusetts Campus Center. The tournament was sponsored by Strategy Games Club, a Recognized Student Organization at UMass. Eight different clubs from around New England participated in the tournament more than 160 people registered to play board games, and about $200 worth of prizes were awarded for various events.

Russian artillery rebuffed the German invasion, Warriors and wizards battled Orks, and Napoleon skirmished with the Dutch and the Prussians. World War I aircraft fell gloriously from the sky as the Allied forces warred with Germany, and Medieval knights clashed excaliburs.

But all that was apparent to the uninitiated observer were the gamers bent intently over card board pieces, graphs and charts or pushing about tiny life-like miniatures of knights, tanks or civil war soldiers.

"It was funny. I started with some of these simple Milton Bradley war games, Stratego, I think. One thing led to another from there, and it just sort of mushroomed," said Bill Flanders, 22, of Springfield as he refered a reenactment of the Napoleonic battle at Quatrebras in 1815. He said the Prussians lost 24,000 men at the battle, which came just before Napoleon's defeat at Waterloo.

The battle was portrayed with some lead figures meticulously hand painted by Flanders. He joined the tournament with a few friends from Springfield who wargame together once a week. "We get together every Thursday night," he said.

The was games use complex statistical models that factor in terrain, fire power, the movement of targets and more, to figure the probability of a hit.

"These are simulations of historical situations," said Rick Horlick, a UMass graduate student studying education. "There were changes in weapons and strategy that had an affect on the battles. Some of these improvements allowed one culture to dominate another," he said.

"The Greeks came up with strategies that allowed them to dominate. The Romans came up with something that allowed them to dominate," he said.

Fantasy games, including Dungeons and Dragons, were played in a separate room at the tournament. In fantasy games each player is required to become a character and act in an imagined world as the character would act.

Leslie Birt, 21, a psychology major at UMass, said she prefers the fantasy games because they are "more human".

"Each person is responsible for one person and the character has a lot more depth to it," she said.

"You win by staying alive and getting more gold — and more powerful," she said.

The character is defined by a series of dice rolls. Each roll decides a quality of the character such as strength, wisdom or magical powers.

Several participants were members of the UMass Science Fiction Society. "If you read Conan and stuff like that it is fun to play out those characters," said Birt

Protest against massacre to take place at 12 today

By HANNAH HOSOM
Collegian Staff

A rally in protest of the massacre last weekend of hundreds of Palestinians will take place at noon today in front of the Student Union building at the University of Massachusetts.

Members of the Committee in Solidarity of Lebanese and Palestinian People said they are hoping for a strong turnout, and are expecting leading members of the campus community to speak to those assembled.

The massacre occurred Saturday when Phalangist (right-wing Christian Lebanese) militia entered refugee camps and killed hundreds of civilians and reportedly removed the bodies with bulldozers and put them into mass graves.

Israeli officials were quoted as saying the Phalangists were allowed past the surrounding Israeli guards into the camps in the hope that they would drive out any Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas. Israeli troops attempted to stop the massacre when what was happening became apparent.

One member of the committee Amir Said of Amherst, said they were calling on people to attend the rally, in an expression of protest to recent events in the Middle East.

The committee is comprised of students who have organized informally as a result of the recent developments in Lebanon.

500 Israelis protest massacre of Palestinians

JERUSALEM (AP) — Prime Minister Menachem Begin held an emergency Cabinet meeting yesterday as hundreds of Israelis protested the massacre of Palestinian civilians in two Beirut refugee camps.

An estimated 500 demonstrators gathered at Begin's home and broke the tranquility of the Jewish New Year holiday with shouts demanding that Begin and Defense Minister Ariel Sharon resign.

Police scuffled with the protestors and used tear gas to disperse the crowd that included at least four left-wing members of Parliament.

Another crowd of angry demonstrators was waiting when Begin emerged from a synagogue yesterday afternoon after a prayer service and about 150 people staged a protest near the northern border with Lebanon, Israel radio reported.

Opposition Labor Party Shimon Peres went on television to demand that Begin and Sharon resign, saying "they have ministerial responsibility for two things" — ordering Israeli troops into west Beirut last Wednesday and allowing the massacre to occur.

Egypt, Israel's only friend in the Arab world, announced Sunday it may withdraw its ambassador from Tel Aviv in protest if the fighting in Lebanon escalates.

President Reagan, who expressed "outrage and revulsion" at the hundreds of deaths in the refugee camp massacres, has called for the immediate withdrawal of Israeli troops from west Beirut.

Begin's government, seeking to ease some of the pressure, began moving troops out of several Beirut neighborhoods but there was no indication of a full-scale evacuation from the Lebanese capital.

The military command said Lebanese army soldiers began taking over security for the refugee camps Sunday morning "in full cooperation with the Israel Defense Forces."

Israel sent its troops into Moslem west Beirut saying it was trying to prevent revenge attacks after Tuesday's assassination of President-elect Bashir Gemayel, the leader of the Christian Phalange Party. The move provoked an outcry from the Begin government's domestic opponents who said it was a dangerous extension of Israeli policy into Lebanese conflicts.

The Foreign Ministry said the massacre proved Israel was correct in taking west Beirut and claimed Israeli troops had "prevented a much greater massacre from taking place."

New England commuters stranded while railroad engineers join strike

BOSTON (AP) — Thousands of Boston area commuters were without rail service and management personnel operated freight trains yesterday as 219 Boston & Maine Railroad engineers joined a nationwide rail strike.

The walkout affects about 40,000 Boston-area commuters, who ride 240 B&M trians daily in a service area that stretches 60 miles to Gardner, according to James Stoetzel, assistant to the vice president and general manager for commuter service.

"As of right now, there will be no commuter rail service Monday, either," Stoetzel said. "We're getting many calls. There is a lot of disruption."

Some 15,000 Amtrak and Conrail commuters were not immediately affected.

The strikers, members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, manned picket lines briefly yesterday morning at Billerica, North and South Stations in Boston and a freight yard in East Cambridge, Stoetzel said.

Union comment was not immediately available. There w... 'o answer at two union offices yesterday.

The strike also cancelled the special B&M train Sunday that would have carried New England Patriots fans from South Station to Schaefer Stadium in Foxboro for a National Football League game with the New York Jets.

The immediate impact on freight service was harder to define.

Dennis Coffey, assistant to the vice president of B&M labor relations and personnel, said some freight trains were operating Sunday with management personnel, but delays were expected today.

Coffey said freight trains bring food, produce, building products, wood, paper, plastics and chemicals into Boston, but he was unable to say how much freight business B&M does or how many trains were involved.

"It's really hard to get a handle on that. Some is scheduled work, some is on call.

"In terms of business in the greater Boston area, the slowdown in local switching to local industry will have some impact. In terms of volume, it's very hard to define," Coffey said.

In an effort to ease commuters' problems today, B&M and Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority representatives met Sunday afternoon, "trying to get a contingency plan to assist commuters coming into Boston," said MBTA spokesman Robert Devin.

Devin said additional buses would run from Salem to the Blue Lines's Wonderland station, from Reading to Oak Grove on the Orange Line, from Burlington to the Haymarket and Park Square stations, from Walpole to Forest Hills on the Orange Line and from the Massachusetts Turnpike to the Riverside stop.

"We're also beefing up rapid transit for the extra people who will be using parking lots in the fringe areas of the MBTA service district." Devin said commuter rail passes would be honored by MBTA buses and rapid transit.

Some B&M trains operate over 250 miles of track under contract for the MBTA.

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, which represents 26,000 locomotive engineers, set a deadline of 12:01 a.m. Sunday for a strike that would shut down most U.S. freight carriers and some passenger trains.

Amtrak service in New England is operated primarily by Conrail crews that would not be affected by a strike, Diane Elliott, Amtrak's director of corporate communications for the east, said in Washington. Conrail engineers are covered by a different contract.

Congress beginning push for federal finance bills

WASHINGTON — A scant 10 days before the beginning of the new fiscal year, Congress is finally starting to move in earnest toward passage of the money bills needed to finance the federal government for the next 12 months.

But at the same time, recognizing that all 13 bills can't possibly be enacted by the Oct. 1 dawning of the new year, both houses are giving hurry-up treatment to another, catch-all measure that will remain in effect until the regular legislation can be passed.

That measure is expected to remain in effect only until early or mid-December, since the leadership of both House and Senate have bowed to a call from President Reagan to reconvene after the November elections and resume debate on the regular bills.

In the House, where all appropriations bills originate, only two of the 13 bills have been passed so far — one dealing with the Department of Housing and Urban Development and related programs and another providing funds for military construction.

Two more bills are scheduled to be debated on the floor of the House this week, providing money for transportation and farm programs.

In the Senate, meanwhile, the housing bill is scheduled for floor debate this week, the first regular money bill to advance that far.

Still to emerge from either the House or Senate committee are the two biggest measures, providing funds for the Pentagon and the Departments of Health and Human ...vices and Labor.

Against this backdrop, the House is also scheduled to ... legislation Wednesday that will finance the ...vernment on a stopgap basis beginning Oct. 1.

Tentative plans call for the Senate Appropriations Committee to debate the bill the day after it is approved in the House.

Party for prince cancelled because of racist policies

LOS ANGELES — A party planned for Prince Philip has been canceled because it was scheduled at the California Club, which bans women members and has few minority group members.

The host, Santa Anita Racetrack President Robert P. Strub, announced the decision Saturday, saying British officials and a representative of the International Equestrian Federation had told him the prince would refuse to attend the Thursday party if it was held at the club.

96-year-old Bess Truman remains in stable condition

KANSAS CITY, MO. — Bess Truman's intestinal ulcer started bleeding slightly overnight, but the former first lady's vital signs remained stable, her doctor said yesterday.

Mrs. Truman, in serious condition at Research Medical Center, also had a slight fever yesterday, said Dr. Wallace Graham.

Graham, her longtime physician, said Mrs. Truman's pulse, respiration and blood pressure were stable.

Mrs. Truman, 97, was hospitalized because of the ulcer on Sept. 2. The ulcer has bled sporadically since she was admitted.

Graham said Mrs. Truman, the widow of the late former President Harry S. Truman, was receiving blood transfusions and special medication to control the bleeding.

Princess Grace's body to be buried sometime today

MONTE CARLO, Monaco — The dignitaries had left and the casinos reopened yesterday while the body of princess Grace lay in a private chapel pending entombment beneath the cathedral where she married Prince Rainer III in 1956.

A palace spokeswomen, Nadia LaCoste, said the interment could be today, but no definite time has been set for placing to rest the one-time Hollywood star who gave a romantic atmoshpere to this playground for the rich.

Mrs. LaCoste said the former Grace Kelly will be buried under a simple stone in the crypt beneath the Monte Carlo cathedral.

An interment service had been scheduled Saturday evening following the Roman Catholic funeral Mass attended by 800 invited guests and another service for the residents of Monaco.

DVP brings variety of speakers to campus

By DAVE LINTON
Collegian Correspondent

Senator Edward Kennedy, columnist Art Buchwald, athletes Bill Lee and Bill Russell and Watergate conspirator G. Gordon Liddy are among the guests the Distinguished Visitors Program (DVP) has brought to the University of Massachusetts to speak on topics of student interest.

"We think in terms of what the general student interest is on the social, political and historical issues that are of concern to students," said DVP chairwoman Tammy Leibowitz.

The DVP will be starting off the semester with comedian Robert Klein, who is scheduled to appear at 8 p.m., Tuesday, at the Fine Arts Center. Other upcoming speakers the DVP is sponsoring on campus are Harvey Wasserman, who will speak on atomic radiaion Oct. 14; Ambassador William Schaufele, who will talk about Poland and U.S. foreign policy Oct. 26; Daniel Keyes, who will speak in a program entitled "The Minds of Billy Milligan: The Ohio State University Campus Rapist" Nov. 9; and Jean Kilbourne, who will speak on media and the depiction of women in a program entitled "Killing Us Softly" Dec. 7.

These lectures are free and will be held in the Student Union Ballroom.

"We're not always trying to draw the big crowds. We do programs where we only get 100 people, but because it is an issue that a certain population of the campus is interested in," Leibowitz said.

"I think we do good work. We try to bring a variety of programs," she said.

"We thought we would start the year on a lighter note to get people who wouldn't normally attend a lecture series to let them know what we're about," Leibowitz said.

The DVP has a current membership of 20 students who meet to discuss the scheduling and publicity of future guests.

The DVP gets information from lecture bureaus and then members meet to discuss the cost of the lectures, which cost between $500 and $5,000, and the expected attendance, Leibowitz said.

Depending on student enrollment, DVP is allocated approximately $13,000 from the UMass Student Activities Fee, which amounts to less than 75 cents each semester per student, Leibowitz said. Most of the lectures are free, but when an admission fee is charged it is to help offset the cost of the lectures, she said.

All the lectures are videotaped and serve as an available reference to students in the archives on the 25th floor of the UMass Tower Library. The videotapes are also shown on the televisions near the Hatch and on the Campus Center Concourse, Leibowitz said.

"If it's a popular lecture and we know all the people couldn't get in, we put TV's outside the hall which we did for McGovern," Leibowitz said.

Any student may join DVP by attending recruitment meetings which are held during the semester and may become a voting member by attending three consecutive meetings, Leibowitz said.

Becoming involved in DVP can be a rewarding experience Chris Marini, 18, a sophmore CASIAC major, who joined DVP at the end of last spring. "It seemed like an opportunity to learn some skills and a chance to meet some interesting people," she said.

Mark Zucherman, 19, a sophmore political science major, joined DVP last year and is now vice-chairperson.

"DVP is an excellent way to meet new and interesting people and to learn a lot about people and issues," he said.

"It's a shame not many people know about DVP," Zucherman said.

Mary Wentworth, of the Umass Everywoman's Center, who lost last weeks primary election to U.S. Rep Silvio Conte.

Congressional candidate says she'll continue battle

By MICHELLE MURRAY
Collegian Staff

She may not have won the election this time around, but Democratic write-in contender in last week's Congressional primary, Mary Wentworth, coordinator of the Poor Women's Task Force at the University of Massachusetts Everywoman's Center, will continue to wage her battle.

After winning Amherst votes by a ratio of nine to one over Silvio Conte, Republican incumbent for 24 years, Wentworth said, "We felt that we did very well." We are pleased with the showing and will try to unseat him in '84."

With campaign funds of $1500, comprised mostly of small contributions, Wentworth said she did remarkably well. Statistics reveal that she lost Franklin County by 10 votes; lost Northampton by a small margin and did well in smaller towns throughout Western Massachusetts.

Wentworth said she anticipated that Conte, who had already won the Republican nomination, might try to win the Democratic nomination through a sticker campaign but she was surprised that his coverage of the polls was so extensive.

Wentworth attributed Conte's success at the polls to his "bountiful campaign coffers" and insists if more people were aware of his voting record, they would not have voted him into office. Wentworth blamed the media in western Massachusetts for not keeping the public informed of Conte's voting patterns.

"Western Massachusetts newspapers don't have the resources or inclination to keep a reporter in Washington to cover what Conte is doing," she said. "Newspapers don't editorialize against the votes that Conte takes."

Wentworth, a Maine native who came to Northampton to attend Smith College over 30 years ago, has been politically active for about 15 years — initially in grassroots organizing.

Of her campaign platform, Wentworth said,"The main part of the platform was directed at the failure of Reaganomics. Conte supported Reagan and his economic policies which are detrimental to the whole of Western Massachusetts."

Wentworth said she supports a nuclear freeze and is against United States' intervention in Central America. She also believes America needs a nationalized health-care plan and that child care should be a priority in Congress.

"Men define the issues (in Congress) and if one third or one half of Congress were women that would contribute big input into what to discuss, such as issues of childcare as well as bringing up issues surrounding peace," she said.

She added that more women in Congress would not make it "good and pure," but it would help to prioritize issues in a different way.

A mother of six, Town Meeting member, vice-president of the Massachusetts Tenants Organization and an activist in anti-racist work in Philadelphia, Wentworth said she thinks what makes her a qualified candidate for Congress is that she is a person with a unique set of experiences.

Group helps men fight for victims of violence

By AMY JENNESS
Collegian Staff

The Men Against Violence Against Women (MAVAW) counseling and educating group began last fall in order to provide an outlet for men interested in working against violence against women, Anne Bolger, one of the original organizers of the group, said yesterday.

"I know this sounds funny, but a lot of men feel a little powerless to deal with violence against women," Bolger said. "It was an idea whose time had come on this campus."

There are Men Against Violence Against Women groups all over the country and I thought it would be neat if we could get one started in this area," Bolger said.

The MAVAW holds workshops in University dormitories and in local communities and counsels men who are close to survivors of rape.

"We get our counseling referrals from the Counselor/Advocate program at the Everywoman's Center and we are also interested in education and outreach workshops," Steven Botkin, 27, a psychological education graduate student, said.

"We will be doing rape workshops in the dorms with the Rape Awareness Team (a UMass group dedicated to rape prevention) as well as our own workshops in the dorm centering around sexism," Botkin said.

Aside from University-related workshops, the group hopes to reach people other than college students.

"We are trying to get into other areas besides campus," said Michael Matfess, 22, a UMass graduate student. "We are trying to reach as many people as possible."

Matfess said the group is currently planning a workshop series entitled "Sexism In The Workplace." The workshops would be held in area businesses and help women and men identify sexual harrassment in the workplace.

Members of the group have different reasons why they decided to get involved with MAVAW.

"I had just graduated and I wanted to stay on campus in some capacity. My major was in community public health and I thought I could relate it to what MAVAW was doing," Chuck Putnam-Myers, an Amherst resident said.

"When I first heard about the group it was at a time in my life when I was ready to go out and do new things. There were women I was close to for whom I had a lot of respect. I was becoming frustrated with things going on around me, like people's views on sex roles," Matfess said.

Botkin said he became involved in MAVAW through studying different forms of oppression in his graduate work. "My study of oppression led to my need for taking action. I was identifying that I could interrupt the ways that the system oppresses around me," he said.

Myers said he sees MAVAW as being a politically involved group as well as a counseling and educating service. "We have signed our names to issues from nuclear freeze to abortion," he said. "We are going to stay small, instead of recruiting we are going to get work done and make a name for ourselves."

Editor says "Reader's Digest Bible" is smoother, more inviting and readable

NEW YORK (AP) — In the beginning the scribe condensed the books of Daniel, First Samuel and Acts. And the Editors of the Reader's Digest saw it and said it was good. Then they said to the scribe, "take six others like you and condense the whole Bible."

And so it came to pass after seven years, in the second year of the presidency of Ronald Reagan, that their work was done, and on the Sabbath the scribes rested while the fruit of their labor was released to the multitudes.

The Reader's Digest Bible is 40 percent shorter than the 850,000-word Revised Standard Version, and "smoother, more inviting, more readable," according to Jack Walsh, the scribe who began editing the first three books of the new Bible in 1975.

It is not possible to quote the streamlined Bible chapter and verse, because it has neither. The 23rd Psalm has become the 13th Psalm because other psalms have disappeared entirely. And hundreds of minor figures, such as Biztha the eunuch, have been consigned to anonymity.

The average reader who sits down to read the St. James or RSV Bible never finishes," said Walsh, 54. "He'd stop as soon as he hit First Chronicles," whose early chapters catalog names and tribes.

Although there are abridged Bibles, Reader's Digest says only its editors cut line by line, excising what it describes as "the three r's": repetition, rhetoric and redundancy.

Space also is saved by deleting large blocks of material deemed non-essential or repetitive by the editors and their consultant, the Rev. Bruce Metzger of the Princeton Theological Seminary. But well-known passages, however unwieldy, are left alone and can be located in the Bible's index.

Some of the Bible's 66 books were substantially reduced, such as Exodus, Chronicles and Deuteronomy, each of which lost about seven out of every 10 words. But the New Testament gospels of Mark and Luke were reduced by only 15 and 25 percent, respectively.

Tougher rules needed for late money reports

BOSTON (AP) — Political candidates in Massachusetts need a greater incentive to comply with state law on reporting campaign contributions, the director of the state's watchdog agency says.

Dozens of candidates for the Legislature, county offices and statewide posts routinely miss the reporting deadlines, and a system of fines or other penalties is needed to force them to act under the law, said Dennis J. Duffin, executive director of the Office of Campaign and Political Finance.

"Fines would be a very useful approach, similar to the power the State Ethics Commission has to enforce the conflict of interest laws," said Duffin, a former Democratic state representative from Lenox who became director of the 10-person finance office in May.

"If that capacity existed, it would serve to refine the group (of delinquents) even smaller...and serve as a deterrent," the soft-spoken Duffin said in an interview at his downtown Boston office, which was a beehive of activity amidst the campaign season.

The state campaign finance office, created in the wake of the Watergate scandal in Washington, was widely viewed as a "toothless tiger" before Duffin became its director in May. Critics say it is still too soon to tell if he will become the vigorous watchdog desired by public interest groups.

Candidates for county and statewide office in Massachusetts must file reports twice a month, listing contributors giving $25 or more and the total of smaller contributions. Legislators and political action committees must report three times each campaign — eight days before the primary and general election, plus a year-end report.

Duffin said he didn't want to embarass the candidates by simply announcing those who have failed to submit a report on time.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The Nightmare Must End

The peace settlement so meticulously negotiated by Philip Habib, chief American Middle East negotiator, only weeks ago brought hope to the many innocent parties involved in the tragic war in Lebanon. Less than a week ago, that hope was destroyed, the victim of the senseless violence which has plagued the Middle East for so many years. All of these acts, though carried out in hopes of killing specific people, in the end took the lives of the innocent, the helpelss and the weak.

The past week has been characterized by violence, the likes of which has not been seen in many years.

On Tuesday, President-elect Bashir Gemayel was assasinated in a bomb explosion which rocked the headquarters of the Christian Phalange Party. The blast also killed or wounded an estimated 60 people.

On Friday, a car-bomb exploded in Paris, seriously wounding an Israeli diplomat and the passengers in his car. Also wounded were an estimated 50 children at a nearby school. Officials say the toll would have been much higher if the bomb had exploded 15 minutes later when an estimated 500 school children would have been on the street where the bomb exploded.

On Saturday, a lone gunman opened fire at a synagogue in Brussels, Belgium, wounding four persons during services for Rosh Hashana. The gunman sprayed the front of the church with a machine gun, the victims of his act mostly being between the ages of 50 and 60.

And finally, on Saturday, unknown gunmen opened fire on Palestinians in Beirut refugee camps. In the words of the International Red Cross, "hundreds of women, children, adolescents and old men were killed." Though reports flowing out of Lebanon at this time are sketchy at best, informed sources are saying the massacre was carried out by right-wing Lebanese Christian militiamen.

The time has come for all concerned parties in the Middle East to put down their guns, sit down at the negotiating table and begin the long and arduous process to hammer out a just and lasting peace. Too much innocent blood has been shed in the Middle East by those supposedly uninvolved in the conflict.

If the life of one child, one bedridden old man, or one widow can be saved, the peace process will not have begun too soon. For the civilians in beseiged Lebanon, for innocent bystanders in Europe and for refugees in camps all over the Middle East, time is slowly running out.

Learning through coalition building

By now the newcomers to Amherst have probably noticed the proliferation of liberal/radical/leftist organizations on this campus. Over the coming year we will witness the fruits of their efforts to raise our awareness of the problems of racism, sexism, anti-Semitism, gay oppression and handicapped oppression; the dangers of nuclear proliferation, draft registration and pro-life legislation; governmental and corporate interference in other countries and much more. There will be demonstrations, petitions, vigils, flyers, posters and tables in the Campus Center. Most of these actions will go relatively unnoticed by the majority of the university community, due to the sad fact that many progressive groups spend all their time, effort and money promoting their particular causes.

Beverly Davis

The combined strength would be much more beneficial if all of these groups of dedicated people decided to join forces and inform the rest of the world that the time had come for change. Imagine members of all these little groups speaking — for just one day — with a single voice. That voice could be heard all over this campus and beyond.

Those of us who are involved in social change have learned from our past efforts at coalition-building that it is not an easy task. The groups have spent time and energy learning about the history and theory of social change — now they must learn to work together. Through cooperation they can learn from each other about their differences, similarities, major goals and minor beliefs. The time has come for adult women and men to learn to practice "real-world" politics, where compromise is an art, not a dirty word, and where progress is as important as process.

A prime example of what happens when we fail to compromise is the fiasco which occurred two years ago during International Woman's Week. The entire university community was deprived of a week of educational and social events because two womens groups could not rise above their differences and build on their commonalities.

If individual groups choose to stay in their own little groups, they will avoid disagreeing with each other. They will also not learn from each other, nor will they gather strength and support in their struggles. One can fail to notice that the whole forest is dying, because one is concentrating on saving a favorite tree.

The most important lesson to be learned from the past is that the rewards of working together are infinite. When groups put aside their minor disagreements and work together on common goals, they can accomplish many things. There is so much to gain if they reach out to each other in solidarity, and such a difficult struggle ahead if they decide to fight alone.

The choice can be made at any time: reach out or stand alone. The groups can decide to speak with many small voices or with a few large ones. They can work with those who may not share all of their beliefs or priorities, or can refuse to discuss them, altogether. Only by openly discussing their beliefs will they comprehend where they can afford to be flexible and where they must stand firmly.

Every day of delay, every decision not to decide, is a wasted moment, and how many moments can student activist groups afford to waste?

US tacitly supports Apartheid

To the Editor

In yet another part of the world, a desparate and unpopular regime is conducting policies, which most Americans would consider reprehensible, with the silent approval and covert assistance of the Reagan administration. In Port Elizabeth, South Africa, apartheid authorities recently "deported" 400 dockworkers (who load the Ford and GM cars assembled there), to remote regions of their own country in order to suppress union organizing. Anti-apartheid activists throughout the African continent have come under the gun of an intensifying campaign of assassination and terror co-ordinated from Pretoria. In a recent letter to the Wall Street Journal, (9/14/82), William Johnston, President of Episcopal Churchmen for South Africa, reports that: "The South African Defense Force, when last heard of, was 175 miles into Angola, and its commander says it is going to stay there". So, not only is the racist regime refusing to negotiate seriously the end of its illegal occupation of Nambia, it conducts unrestrained aggression against its neighbors.

We, as Americans, bear a special responsibility: the international isolation and general condemnation of the South African regime only makes it clearer that the apartheid system could not stand for a single instant without the support of our own government. The U.S. government has consistently blocked, at the United Nations, the imposition of thorough economic sanctions and other potentially effective measures. All the while, U.S. mutlinationals move jobs from here to there, reaping superprofits from the cheap labor guaranteed by the apartheid system.

The Southern Africa Solidarity Committee works to educate area residents about U.S. government support for apartheid and to mobilize opinion against that complicity. We seek to organize support and assistance for the broad and democratic anti-Apartheid movement in South Africa, which is led by the African National Congress.

Currently, we are working for passage of a state law which would prohibit the investment of state employee pension funds in corporations which profit from apartheid. The "Mass Divest bill" passed the Massachusetts Senate during the summer, and is on its way to consideration by the House.

The Southern Africa Solidarity Committee will meet on Thursday, Sept. 23, in Campus Center 811-815. All are invited to see a short slideshow about the Mass Divest campaign, hear an update on events in Southern Africa, and discuss the ongoing work of the Committee.

Gabriel Handles Anxiety

By MARK WHARTON
Collegian Staff

This past July, Peter Gabriel and Thomas Brooman set the stage for what was to become Gabriel's new record by organizing an event of music and dance in Bath, England (Gabriel's home town). Invited to attend were the Walking Drums of Burundi, along with other rhythmic and dance troupes from Zaire, Bali, Senegambia, and Ghana. One of the festivals goals was to give some Western musicians a chance to acknowledge their sources.

Preceeding the event, an excellent benefit album was released entitled Music and Rhythm. The record is non-profit, with its proceeds going to cover the expense of bringing the musicians from Africa. The remainder of the costs were given to support "WOMAD": World of Music, Arts, and Dance. Many Western artists donated tracks; included are: Xte, Peter Townshend, David Byrne (Talking Heads), The Beat, and Gabriel himself, working with Police drummer Stewart Copeland.

The event itself failed to attract enough English "punters" needed to meet the acceleratting costs of the festival. Ultimately, Gabriel was saddled with the moral, not legal obligation to assume the task of paying off the debt. Gabriel, along with his old mates, Genesis, are putting on a benefit reunion in October to help cover part of the costs. Unfortunately, these days culture has its price.

Gabriel has just released his fourth solo record titled Peter Gabriel, though Geffen Records has been schlocking "Security" on the plastic wrapper. Peter Gabriel takes careful aim at his direction, with a well calculated album. With the recent collapse of WOMAD, it looks like Gabriel is moving a little closer to the center than originally planned.

The complexion of this record shows the artist and his disillusionment with society. Gabriel senses guilt after working with the African musicians and he expresses anger at his own environment. His involvement with tribal rhythms is more apparent as he works to construct the backbone of the music against heavily layered electronics. Tony Levin's (King Crimson) intricate bass is awesome throughout, especially on "Lay Your Hands on Me". Putting the drums up front gives this music the power it needs to convey a message, while Gabriel's lyrical flights of fancy are allowed to evolve around his ever improving keyboards.

The topics have changed from assasination, mental asylum, and criminal intrusion, with the glimmer of hope that society will prevail to assert that what once was, soon will be again. Gabriel's fear of society has turned to just fear itself, and the way he is handling it is reflecting it back to us.

"MOST STUDENTS DON'T KNOW THAT ARMY ROTC LEADS TO AN ARMY OFFICER'S COMMISSION AT GRADUATION."

Besides studying for his degree in management, senior Scott Bacon is also learning what it takes to become an officer through Army ROTC.

"I attended an Army ROTC Day during my freshman summer orientation. When I found out you weren't obligated to anything your freshman and sophomore years, I decided to try it. I enjoy ROTC. I'm learning things I normally wouldn't learn in college. Like leadership theories. And tactics. The management training you receive is really good, too. It helped me a lot with my other management courses.

"I'm pretty involved with the University, so I'm glad ROTC doesn't take up a lot of time. It's just a couple of hours a week. At the end of your junior year you have to go to Advanced Camp. It's a lot of fun. You get introduced to everything the Army has to offer. Tanks, helicopters, you name it.

"In your last two years of ROTC you receive $100 a month. The way I see it, ROTC is paying you money and you just give the Army back a little of your time. When I get out of the Army, my experience should make it easier to get a job. Corporations look for officers, because they have experience managing people and equipment. And I think starting salaries might be higher because of that experience."

For Scott Bacon, adding Army ROTC to his college schedule has really paid off. Because it actually added another dimension to his college education.

And Army ROTC can do the same for you.

Santana cleans the Cage

SANTANA
September 17
Curry Hicks Cage

By BEN TERRALL and BEVERLY SWITZLER
Collegian Correspondents

Despite a disheartening shift towards a mass-produced top 40 FM sound on their new album "Shango," Santana gave the audience at the Curry Hicks Cage Friday night a surprisingly powerful performance.

Introduced by Bill Graham, the infamous Godzilla of rock — roll promoters, Santana kicked into an uptempo instrumental at almost exactly eight o'clock, registering shock in those used to interminable waits in sweaty, smoke-filled infernos. Unkile the chaotic Jeff Beck concert last year, UPC left the floor of the Cage open so that those who wanted to could retreat to the bleachers while more manic souls were free to jump around without being told to sit down. It was a wise decision. The musicians were clearly pleased with the enthusiasm of the dancing, screaming hordes.

Santana classics like "Oye Como Va", "Black Magic Woman", and "Europa" especially stood out but this was no boring rehash of greatest hits. Although they performed practically the same show recorded five years ago on the live album "Moonflower", the assembled musicians played with a freshness and intensity seen all too seldom in these days of refried polyester "music". A definite advantage over the "Moonflower" days was the absence of the keyboard player Tom Coster who tended to play "look I'm almost a lead guitar" synthesizer solos that hogged the spotlight and overcrowded Carlos Santana's guitar. The new man on keyboards sticks to being a team player and lets Carlos, the founder and leader of the band, demonstrate his guitar-playing prowess.

Of the more recent material, the songs originally done by other artists were particularly effective. Buddy Holly's gem "Well Allright" (also done by Blind Faith in the late 60s) was well done, as was Traffic's "Dealer" — though the new vocalist Alex Lingertwood is about as funky as a loaf of Wonder bread and does not have "the soul and range to sing the demanding repertoire of Santana," as the pressbook claims. The real killer of the evening was the old Zombies tune "She's Not There". Carlos proved that above all else he is a powerhouse electric guitar player, soloing with enough fury and volume for even the most deranged maximum feedback fiends. There was a feeling of unabashed affection for 60s rock and roll in the air as Carlos blasted out the lead to The Doors' "Love Me Two Times" before launching into the first of three long and immensly satisfying encores. But it was nostalgia with a vengance that recalled the fiery emotion of Jimi Hendrix: Carlos' guitar sounded like a Mack truck losing its breaks on a mountain pass.

Though Santana's audiences are predominately comprised of white teenage males who also eat up the current marketable commodities of the music business — Journey, Foreigner, REO Speedwagon and other "shmuck rockers", he has maintained his musical integrity by sticking to the diverse roots that have made his sound so unique. The three man percussion onslaught of Orestes Vilato, Raul Rekow, and Armando Peraza create an impressive rhythm machine; Carlos also showed himself to be a talented percussionist during several extended jams.

Santana has a reputation for trying to impose his religious leanings onto his listeners. At the cage there were no attempts at mass levitation and the music was the central focus of the night. Though he has aimed for wider commercial success on his last few albums, Carlos Santana has not "sold out". He remains a consummate musician.

Anger at the Hanger with 8th Route Army

EIGHT ROUTE ARMY
DA STUPIDS
THE EXILES
September 15
Hanger One

By SAUL NATANSOHN
Collegian Correspondent

Eight Route Army is comprised of the same members of the now defunct Section Eight. They identified themselves simply as Ray on guitar, Jim on bass, Mattie on drums, and Jon on lead vocals, they compared their sound to that of Gang of Four and the Clash. Judging from their lyrics the political motivation behind the band is all too apparent. Jim and Ray write all their own songs, and their talent will be put to the test next month when Eighth Route Army releases their first single.

They drive into their set with the impression of just another pseudo-Clash band, but the more you listen the more you realize that their inspiration extends deeper. In general, their music effected authentic anger, not just the imitation variety displayed by so many bands these days. Memorable cuts included "Bombs" with drum beats falling like shrapnel on the crowd and, at times, lyrics that actually pleaded for an end ("Bombs, bombs, bombs, bombing everything"). "Think For Yourself", the single to be released next month, displayed decent lyrical work and vocal synthesis on the part of the band, exemplifying the band's work ethic. A piercing guitar emphasis mixed with slamming drums and subtle bass completed the effect nicely. "No more Fun", a song venting the frustrations of all draft age youth ("I don't want to die with a Russian bullet in my head!") ended with slamming drum work by Mattie and a convincing tempo perforated by Ray's guitar lead. Other themes dealt with by the Eighth Route included unemployment, ghetto life and assasination; clearly, Jim and Ray's songwriting is the band's biggest asset.

> "Anger at the world, anger at the system, anger with the American way of life."

What they need however, is greater diversification in their music, notably the often repetitive guitar leads. This band has a lot going for them, but they just have to broaden their sights on the instrumental, not lyrical, side of the group.

Preceeding the Eighth Route Army were two other local bands: The Exiles and Da Stupids. The Exiles are Joe Page on guitar and lead vocals, Frank on drums, Sal Afflitto on bass, and SS on guitar. They cite influences from the N.Y. Dolls, Johnny Thunder, and early Alice Cooper in their music — sort of a combination of an English synthetic band crossed with the New York Underground sound. They opened with "Artiste American," a song with a hard, angry guitar sound. The group's similarity to the Clash was obvious in "Outside Looking In" and "Gotta Get Out Of Here". "Help Me, Love Me" featured Dave Greason from Amherst on trombone that was somehow out of synch with the rest of the band and scratchy, irritating guitar leads. Still, the guitar in "Falling Off the Edge" literally had the crowd shaking with its intensity, and was supported by solid drumwork from Frank. A good set, though again the composition was a little unvaried for the layman.

The Exiles were followed by Da Stupids, a quartet centering around Mars, a tall figure clad in red who cites as her home...well you can guess that one. This band again displayed the raw anger predominate throughout the evening, with their drums coming through as the main focus of their hostility. The guitar mix was adequate, but nothing to write home about. Da Stupids emphasized short, 90-second songs that at times displayed flashes of inspiration but were sometimes flat and out of synch. One cut had the band daring each other to play faster and faster, and the tempo was so electric the audience was left in a daze trying to keep up with them. Mars has a great voice, somewhat like Missing Persons' Dale Bozzio, but Mars was much more intensive in her delivery. Not a bad set from a band that's only been around for six months.

and a pass. Then Dean Pecevich pitched the ball to Garry Pearson and the UMass All-American, who had a stellar day, turned the corner and was gone, racing the 56 yards to the end zone untouched.

On the day, Pearson, running behind the talented UMass offensive line, was to gain 165 yards on 22 carries.

The tie was short-lived, however, as Holy Cross, on its next possession, responded with a touchdown of its own. The 80-yard drive was highlighted by the leadership and passing of Muldoon and the running of fullback Mark Covington.

The Minutemen then drove to the Crusader 29 yard line before having to settle for a field goal attempt. In what UMass head coach Bob Pickett termed play of the game, Paul Walsh's kick was blocked by Steve Raquet and returned to the UMass 46 yard line by HC's Rob Porter.

From there, the Crusader offense scored again with the touchdown coming with just over a minute left in the half. The score was then 21-7 instead of 14-10.

The Minutemen totally dominated the third quarter. The defense held the Crusader offense without a first down while the UMass offense produced drives of 56 and 40 yards.

Both drives ended in frustration instead of points, however, and the score remained 21-7 until the fourth quarter.

Eight minutes into the final quarter, Holy Cross iced the game with an 81 yard touchdown drive which was capped by a perfectly executed misdirection run by tailback Andy Clivio.

UMass completed the scoring with a touchdown pass from Pecevich to Ron Mangarelli.

In a play that perfectly symbolized the frustration of the afternoon for the Minutemen, a mishandled snap from center at the Holy Cross goal line in the closing minute handed the football back to the Crusaders.

Crusader coach Rick Carter was pleased with his team, especially the contest's MVP, Muldoon.

"This is an important victory . . . Pete Muldoon showed a lot of class," said Carter.

The win was Holy Cross' 300th at home.

"The difference was they scored. We had our chances to win, but we couldn't get the ball in the end zone," said Pickett. "I hope that we are mature enough to take this in stride and bounce back against Harvard next week. Losing is part of the game."

Another unfortunate loss for the Minutemen occurred during the first half when middle guard Scott Rose broke his leg. Rose will be out for the remainder of the season.

Next week, the Minutemen travel to Harvard to play the Crimson. For all fans interested, the Northeast Area Government is sponsering a bus trip to the Harvard game.

Can Moses lead the 76ers to the promised land?

By BRIAN C. MURPHY
Collegian Correspondent

When I first learned that Moses Malone had become a member of the Philadelphia 76'ers, a sick feeling came over me. Being a devout follower of the Boston Celtics, I didn't feel it was fair. I wondered what kind of fate the Hoop God had in for us. The Sixers have oodles of talent as it is. Throw Malone in with them and they might be the first team to go 82-0. Imagine the starting lineup, Doctor J., Toney (can anyone stop that man?), BJ, Mo Cheeks, and Malone.

Malone is a superstar. There's no denying that. He consistently averages 25-30 points a game. He's won the MVP twice, and without a doubt, is the best offensive rebounder since Paul Silas. But for Malone to excel, the offense has to be geared around him. And that just won't be the case in Philadelphia, which is why I feel Moses Malone won't bring the Sixers that long awaited NBA crown

In Houston, Malone was the man. The offense revolved around him. He'd get the ball in low and power it up to the hoop. But that's the way the Rocket offense was designed. Moses was the king, the other four players were the pawns.

But, in Philadelphia, that won't be the case. Try to tell the Doc and Andrew that from now on they revolve around Malone. Good joke, huh? Malone will now be one of five. He is expected to pass the ball, set picks, etc. That's not the man's game.

Then there's the pressure. Caldwell Jones and Darryl Dawkins are gone. Now there's only Malone and the rookie from California, Mark McNamara as legitmate big men. Just how much of a slack can a rookie pick up? Malone will be going crazy on defense, playing his man and keeping an eye on the rooks man too.

Then there's the money. Six years for $13.2 million. A cool $2.2 million per. The Doc is making about $900,000 per year. Who thinks the Doc will stand for being the second highest paid player on Philly.

Philadelphia is desperate. For the last five years they've told Philadelphians that we owe you one, and they need it bad. But Malone isn't the answer. They lost next years probable number one or two draft choice. They need a Sampson or Ewing, not Malone.

Women booters drop Plymouth State in opener

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's soccer team kicked off their 1982 season this past Saturday by shutting out Plymouth State, 4-0 at Plymouth State.

It was a game that saw the emergence of several Minutewomen freshmen as offensive threats.

The only score of the first half of play came at 22:39 of the period when freshmen Jamie Watson scored to put UMass ahead to stay with a goal that was assisted by Sharon Baggett.

UMass coach Kalekena Banda felt that Plymouth State surprised the Minutewomen in the first half with their aggressive play.

"They took it to us for the first 20 minutes of the half," said Banda, "If they had scored first I think we would have been in trouble."

But, it was UMass who scored first and when the second half began the Minutewomen had regained their composure and the flow of the game started going in their favor.

Team captain Natalie Presser was the next name logged in the scorekeeper's book when she upped the score to 2-0 with a goal at 8:21 of the second half. She was assisted by Watson on the tally.

After Presser's goal, it was an all-freshmen scoring show that finished off the game as the last two goals were both scored and assisted by freshmen.

Kelly Hutcheons made it 3-0 when she scored the first goal of her Minutewomen career 20:36 of the period. She was assisted by Paula Stassis.

Just under three minutes later Stassis picked up another assist when she found Susan Bird open for the final goal of the game. The time of the goal was 23:23.

Banda had high praise for his defense and singled out Elizabeth Semonik and Laurie Steeks for their fine performances.

Tuesday, the Minutewomen open a three game home stand when Westfield State visits Boyden Field. Banda is hoping that he will have the services of All-American Nina Holmstrom at least partially available for that game since Westfield State is one of the top teams in New England. Holmstrom was sidelined for the Plymouth State game due to a knee injury.

Game time on Tuesday is at 3:00 p.m.

Karen Orlowski returns a volley during yesterday's match against Rutgers University. The Minutewomen were 1-1 over the weekend as they down the University of Rhode Island 6-3 on Saturday and lost to Rutgers 7-2 yesterday.

HC Crusaders cruise past UMass

The football tells the story as Paul Walsh's field goal attempt is low. The kick was knocked down by a Holy Cross defender.

Pearson's 165 yards not enough

By KEVIN DELUCA

If UMass fans were to look at the statistics of the UMass, Holy Cross football game, they would have been heartened to see that the Minutemen led the Crusaders in yards rushing and that the teams were tied in yards passing. The UMass offense also led in time of possession.

Unfortunately, statistics can be misleading. One glance at the score-board told UMass fans the disappointing truth:

HOLY CROSS 27 UMASS 14

For, despite the 330 yards gained, the Umass offense could not get the ball in the end zone. In fact, UMass was to have drives sputter at the Holy Cross 29, 16, 19, and one yard lines for lack of the big play.

On the other hand, the Holy Cross offense, to their credit, was able to convert four long drives into touchdowns. As a result, they were victorious.

Holy Cross opened the scoring on their second possession. Starting at their own 37 yard line, the Crusaders, with emerging star Pete Muldoon at the helm, wisely mixed running and passing plays to get to the UMass two yard line, where quarterback Muldoon dove in for the score.

After exchanging punts, the Minutemen finally got going. First they gained twelve yards on four running plays

Men's soccer team loses game in final minutes

By CHARISSE E. FEINERMAN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team gave up a disappointing loss to the University of Southern Connecticut on Friday 1-0.

The Minutemen played tentatively throughout the contest, probably owing to the knowledge that Southern was one of the best teams on their schedule, and as the final minutes of the second half ticked away, it appeared that even though UMass had lacked any offensive punch all afternoon, they would still manage to go into an overtime period on the shoulders of a stalwart performance by UMass goalkeeper, Jeff Smith, with the score tied at 0-0.

This would not be the case, however, as hopes for that overtime period ended abruptly with just one minute and nine seconds showing in regulation.

Connecticut's Sarmi Joseph, off an assist from teammate Ron Basile, ended a scoreless game, and gave the win to an exuberant Southern squad.

"They were lucky to get away from Boyden field with a win," said Junior Lenn Margolis.

The Minutemen had a couple of scoring opportunities during the game but came away empty handed each time. Freshman Eon John rallied down the line with the ball, about halfway through the second half, in an attempt to pass to an awaiting teammate, but, no one was there to receive his pass. Earlier, sophomore Michael Rudd had made an impressive steal in Connecticut territory, but Connecticut's defense tightened and nothing happened.

The most impressive play came from Smith, who had eight saves in the second half and eleven for the game. Without Smith's play there could very well have been several Connecticut goals on the scoreboard before Joseph's game winner.

Although the team lacked a certain amount of aggression, the defense was there to defer many shots away from the Massachusetts net. Playing defense for UMass in stopper position was Lenn Margolis, who played for a full ninety minutes.

"We had the same defense that we had against Bridgeport, it is just that Southern is the best division two team that we play," said Margolis.

It seems a shame that after playing a scoreless game for eighty nine minutes that the UM team should have to swallow such a bitter loss. Staying close to the Connecticut team was a very major point in Friday's game.

"We will have a good season. Last year they were the best team that we played. We lost to them last season 3-0. At least in this game we stuck with them for eighty nine minutes," said Margolis.

Wednesday, the kickers host their third consecutive home game of the season against the University of New Hampshire at 3:00 on Boyden field.

UM men's tennis team victorious in Vermont

By SCOTT HOOD
Collegian Correspondent

When the van pulled into the Boyden parking lot during the wee hours of Saturday night, a long day for the University of Massachusetts men's tennis team was finally over. Despite a long three-and-one-half hour van ride, the netmen shook off its effects and managed to squeeze out a 5-4 victory over the University of Vermont Saturday at the brand-new Patriek Indoor Tennis Center in Burlington, Vermont.

The Minutemen rode the waves of victory in four of the six singles matches to the triumph, which evened their season record at 1-1.

Neal Mackertich defeated arch-rival Bob McCredie 6-3, 6-4 at number one singles and gained a measure of revenge in the process.

"The turning point was when I started getting more depth on my shots," said Mackertich. "When the pace of the match slowed down, I was okay. I really wanted to win bad because he (McCredie) beat me in a tournament a few weeks ago and we hadn't beaten Vermont in the four years I've been at UMass."

Other victories for the netmen in singles were recorded by Nick Julian, who topped Alex Stimpson6-4, 6-4 at number four, and Rich Lindgren, who at number five, rebounded to beat Ross Abrams 1-6, 6-2, 6-2.

"I came out aggressive and started fast. Then I backed off, but eventually I settled down," said Julian of his match.

"I decided to dictate the tempo and be aggressive. At URI I wasn't aggressive," said Goodman.

Vermont's Clark Wultt defeated Steve Jordan 6-4, 6-2 and Chris Deery of Vermont got by Dave Salem 6-3, 6-4, at the NUMBER two and six positions, respectively, for Vermont.

In the doubles, Lindgren-Jordan registered the lone UMass win, 6-0, 6-3 over Peter Newman and Neil McNeil, Goodman-Mackertich lost to McCredie-Wultt, 6-3, 6-3 and Julian-Salem were nipped by Stimpson-Deery, 7-6, 7-5.

Coach Bob Szlosek, obviously pleased, remarked, "We are playing with more maturity, quickness, and confidence this year than last. We are attacking the ball. Last year we were always missing the big points. Mackertich and Julian had good wins today. I'm also happy with Jordan

Today, UMass travels to West Point, N.Y. to take on Army. The first home match is Wednesday, September 22 against the University of New Hampshire on the Boyden Courts at 2:30 p.m.

MASSACRE IN REFUGEE CAMPS

Since June 6th when Israel invaded Lebanon under the pretext of pushing the Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO) guerillas and its Lebanese allies to the 25 mile zone North of its border, the U.S. has been hypocritical showing its false protest against the Israeli invasion which broke that 25 mile zone that was the Israeli objective.

More than 50 thousand people, mostly civilians, had been killed during the Israeli invasion on Lebanon. Recently the PLO and Lebanese people who were in protest against the Israeli invasion were surrounded in Beirut, the capital of Lebanon.

Two weeks or so ago, the PLO and Lebanese that were trapped by the Israelis in West Beirut had made an agreement that was put forth by the mediator, U.S. special envoy, Philip Habib. Some of the agreement reads that if the PLO would retreat and evacuate West Beirut, they should be given full guarantee and assurance by mainly the U.S., France and Italy for full protection of their women and children and other civilians that were left behind.This agreement specified that there should not be any attack by Israel or its Phalangist allies.

Another part of the agreement which was violated was that Israel will not enter Beirut after the evacuation of the PLO.
This Friday thousands of Palestinians were mssacred in two refugee camps by the Phalangist militia and Saad Haddad, both Israeli allies..

The Israeli troops blocked the area surrounding the refugee camps then permitted the entrance of the Phalangists inside the camps, according to both the New York Times and the Boston Globe. Associated Press repoters who visited the two camps said they "saw bodies sticking out of rubble, which camp residents claimed the militiamen had bulldozed after the killings. Saw what appeared to be entire families gunned down in their homes, and rows of bodies in the street, men who appeared to have been lined up against walls and then shot." Reporters said bulldozer tracks could be seen in the dirt in the camps. Some redidents told them the killers had returned after the massacres and tried to cover up bodies with the rubble of buildings destroyed by more than two month of Israeli shelling that had occured before. According to the reports that stated the Israeli soldiers manned positions on a hill less than a quarter mile away from the Shatila camp.

On the other hand, President Ronald Reagan issued a written statement in which he said he "did not blame the Israelis for the killings, nor had any evidence surfaced to link them (the Israelis) to the deaths."

AP PHOTC

Under the protection and suppervision of the Israeli army, babies, children, women and men were massacared by the Phalangist of Saad Haddad militia that were trained and armed by Israel. After the massacre, the bodies covered with flies, were bulldozed to cover up the slained corpes.

A Subtle Way Of Genocide

Reprinted from Newsweek

To many "native" Hawaiians of Polynesian ancestry what once was a life in paradise has changed to a forceful and progressive struggle to hold what little they've got. Ever since the advent of Capt. James Cook in 1778 and the arrival of the Westerners, the Hawaiians' numbers were all but decimated by epidemics of syphilis, measles and the common cold. In a matter of decades they had also lost their land. But in the last few years many Hawaiians have grown angry at what they see as the supression of their rights and culture, and now a native resurgence is under way.

Not so long ago the phrase He Hawai'i Au --I am a Hawaiian-- was uttered in half-embarrassed whispers, reflecting the despair of a conquered and dispossessed race. Today the 175,000 Hawaiians and part-Hawaiians who make up 19 percent of Hawaii's population are proclaiming their ancestry with new pride and assertiveness, resulting in a new pride a new appreciation for the native language, culture, crafts, values--and their potential political clout. But, the Hawaiians still have a long way to go before they can gain significant power in a state where no ethnic group is a majority. For one thing, their movement lacks lokahi-- unity. And while many Hawaiians concede that their resurgence depends primarily oneducation and economic training, the movement's prime focus remains the most limited and fought-over resource in the island state--the land, and particularly hundreds of thousands of acres that a federal commission may turn over to the Hawaiians as restitution for the American-led 1893 overthrow of the island monarchy.

Independence: A final resolution of the complicated restitution question is probably years away. But it represents a breathtaking possibility for a people who steadily have lost their population to disease and despair aNd their jobs to hc.des of imported workers, including the Samoans and Tongans who are even begining to take away even their Waikiki nightclub jobs. With American annexation in 1898, the Hawaiians also lost their independence --and much of their culture. Speaking Hawaiian in school was forbidden and their traditions were exploited and "plasticized" for the benefit of mainland tourists. The social toll has been staggering: among all state ethnic groups, Hawaiians today h[illegible] the lowest income, poorist housing and highest rates in [illegible]elfare, male suicide and school dropouts. "It's much like [illegible] American Indian" says state Senate candidate Adelai[illegible] De Soto. "When everything around you tells you you're n[illegible]ood and you need to be taken care of, the cycle of depe[illegible]cy is perpetuated."

Shame kept the Hawaiians quiet, and those who questioned the injustice were told by elders to kuli-kuli-- shut up. But their silence was broken in the 1970's, beginning with the famous pig-farmer protests in which police tried to oust a squatter living on a site cleared for a housing complex. Under the banner aloha 'aina--love for the land--the Hawaiians later joined environmentalists and Japanese-Americans in demonstrations and legal battles over tourist developments and ancient access rights, fights sometimes won on First Amendment religious grounds. They also formed a private welfare group and a native Hawaiian legal corporation. Eventually, it all began to translate into political muscle--and a resurgence of the Hawaiian identity.

Their greatest triumph came in 1978. At a state constitutional convention, Hawaiian was made the co-official state language and the teaching of native history, language and culture was made mandatory in public schools. But, most important, the Hawaiians won 20 percent of state revenues from the disputed crown lands to operate the Office of Hawaiian Affairs (OHA). The unique body, which has its own voter roll and conducts seperate Hawaiian-only elections for nine trustees who coordinate and consult on most state affairs involving the nat[illegible]s the closest we can come to sovereignty," says state Rep. John Waihee. But, others have even higher hopes for OHA, including the eventual takeover of public lands for use as a Hawaiian economic base. "We could build our own nation within a nation, just like American Indians have," argues Huanani-Kay Trask, 32, a teacher of radical courses in American studies at the University of Hawaii.

Battle Over Women's Rights

Reprinted from Africa News

"Women were as much a part of the liberation struggle as men, and now that the war is over they must not become forgotten soldiers."

The words are those of Zimbabwean Teurai Ropa Nhongo, who fought alongside other guerrillas of the Patriotic Front coalition in a war that led to majority rule and independence for the country that was once white-ruled Rhodesia.

Nhongo today is the nation's minister of community development and women's affairs. Like many of her 3.5 million Zimbabwean sisters, however, she feels that women still find themselves at a legal disadvantage even under the nation's new constitution. And she is concerned about the pace of change.

In the midst of its other pressing problems, the Zimbabwean government has at least made a start of tackling some of the most blatant forms of sex discrimination. Laws have already been passed giving women equal pay and paid maternity leave, though these have not been thoroughly enforced as yet. And in August of 1981 the Zimbabwe Cabinet decided to phase out the use of Depo Provera, making Zimbabwe the first African country to ban the use of this harmful contraceptive.

With the support of Prime Minister Robert Mugabe, Nhongo is trying to push other measures through parliament. Changing the statutes themselves may prove relatively easy, the minister observes, adding, "It's going to be a hard, long battle changing attitudes which have hardened through the decades."

Much of the recent discussion in Parliament concerns what has been dubbed "The Women's Act," the drafting of legislation that would for the first time give women the same property and inheritance rights as men. Currently the Zimbabwe woman is legally a minor all her life, under the guardianship of her father and later her husband or some other male relative. She cannot, for example, leave home, take a job, go to school or open a bank account without the permission of her guardian.

As a minor, the Zimbabwean woman owns no property, except for a piece of land traditionally set aside on her husband's farm. The produce from this plot generally supplements her family's meals or is sold in the market. Women also own mavoko property: goods acquired through activities such as midwifery, pottery, basket weaving and beer-brewing. Everything else belongs to her husband and is passed on to his relatives when he dies.

Increasingly, such inheritance cases are bitterly contested, with in-laws laying claims to expensive modern mavoko items such as stoves, refrigerators and sewing machines.

In addition,custom stipulates that when the husband dies his brother or another male relative will inherit his wife. Since the widow loses all her husband's property to her in-laws, the only alternative open to her is finding a non-agricultural job and raising her children herself.

The majority of women have little education, however, and street vending, brewing beer and prostitution are among the few jobs open to them, according to a government report.

"We had women commanders in very dangerous areas and now after the war we have to be kept back by silly inheritance laws because it is our tradition? Where was that tradition when bombs were falling on everybody?" asks Julia Zvobgo, one of nine women elected to Parliament and a sponsor of new legislation on this issue.

In a study conducted by the Ministry of Community Development and Women's Affairs, Report on the Situation of Women in Zimbabwe, ninety-nine percent of the women interviewed (both urban and rural) agreed that property rights and inheritance laws should be modified.

Those in farming areas have some particular grievances of their own. Women perform seventy percent of the farm labor (tilling, weeding, harvesting and selling of produce), but their husbands, as owners, make all the decisions and enjoy the legal status with which to enter credit arrangements for buying fertilizer and seed.

Other women claim to have lost opportunities to learn new agriculture methods because extension services tend to be "by men for men." In addition, wives are also sometimes forbidden by their spouses from associating will male extension workers, even in a learning environment. "It is the behavior based on man's control of land and produce that takes the incentive out of us to work for development, one woman remarks in the ministry's report.

Another institution under fire is "bride price," or lobola. Originally intended to serve as affirmation of a young man's sincerity or devotion for his intended, lobola requires that he give the bride's father a number of cows, goats, sheep, or in some cases, cash, for her hand in marriage.

Today, however, many women say that lobola has assumed a more commercial role. "Fathers think of their daughters as property that will anrich them," complains Julie Zvobgo. "You can hear men saying, 'My daughter is getting married, so I will soon be able to start a small business or mayba buy a new tractor."

Many women see advantages to keeping lobola. In fact, the Report on the Situation of Women finds that roughly fifty percent of those interviewed were opposed to any changes in the institution. Some say lobola is crucial to bringing two people and their families together.

Others feel, however, that the high prices demanded by the parents often leave the newly-weds inadequate financial resources with which to begin married life. "My parents", said one opponent, "are always seen as the source of family financial problems fo having charged too much money."

Others feel, however, that the high prices demanded by the parents often leave the newly-weds inadequate financial resources with which to begin married life. "My parents," said one opponent, "are always seen as the source of family financial problems for having charged too much money."

Other opponents of lobola point out that young men are often unable to finish paying the full price, a predicament that compels the woman's guardian to refuse them permission to register the marriage. Not only does an unregistered marriage leave more room for polygamous situations, but it also denies the wife any legal protection should the marriage end in divorce.

Teurai Nhonga hopes for legislation some day that would at least lower the price of lobola or set it at a fixed price in order to make it affordable and less commercialistic. But some women, such as S. Samanyango of the opposition National Front of Zimbabwe Party, protest that marriages where men pay less for their wives "wouldn't last very long."

As Zimbabweans await the outcome of The Women's Act debate in Parliament, even its staunchest supporters caution that the legislation by itself will not guarantee rapid change. "We need a second revolution in this country," Julia Zvobga said recently in a television interview, "this time for women".

Kentucky Governor John Y. Brown has withdrawn his state's "welcome mat" for South Africa, following a meeting with NAACP President John Johnson and a delegation of anti-apartheid activists.

The state Commerce Department had selected South Africa as one target for promoting Kentucky sales abroad and had sent a trade mission to the white-ruled nation in July.

In response, Johnson asked for the August 26 meeting with the governor, which was also attended by American Committee on Africa executive director Jennifer Davis, Jerry Herman from the American Friends Service Committee, Kentucky legislator Georgia Brown, Corbin Seavers from the National Black Independent Political Party, and Mokubung Nkomo from the African National Congress of South Africa.

According to participants in the meeting, the governor agreed to curb any expansion of trade with South Africa. He made his position public in a speech that same day before a predominantly black business luncheon in Louisville.

"We are not going to do business with companies that believe in segregation," he stated. "We are not going to support any country that believes in racism."

"We think he made the proper decision," Johnson told AFRICA NEWS. "I don't think he ever intended to let Kentucky lend support to such policies as those followed in South Africa."

In a further step, Brown has said she will introduce legislation requiring state pension funds to divest their holdings in corporations investing in South Africa.

SANTANA..... An Electrofying Experience

by Vicky Carter Photos by Ed Cohen

Santana, September 17, 1982 - The show opened to thunderous applause as soon as the lights went off. The group Devadip Carlos Santana (leader, guitar), Alex Ligertwood (guitar, vocals), Richard Baker (keyboards), David Margen (bass), Graham Lear (drums), Armando Peraza (congo, bongo), Raul Rekow (conga), Orestes Vilato (timbales), were given a standing ovation, which lasted throughout the performance. The audience started a continuous scream which also last till the end. It made it difficult to listen to the music although it was loud. The volume was so high the sound was distorted and sounded better outside the Cage than in. This may be due to the soundman's unfamiliarity with the acoustics of the Cage. The light show was excellent.

Armando Peraza, congas, bongo, quiro and maracas, is the rhythmic force behind the whole band. Cuban born, he incorporates Afro-Cuban rhythms into the electric guitar sound of Carlos Santana the band leader. Without the strength and power of this Afro-Cuban rhythmic energy, the band would be just another rock and roll.

Carlos Santana chose to play many of his old hits, "Black Magic Woman", "Oye Como Va" and others along with new material. They played a song for Oshun, one of the African orishas which had a real West African flavor.

Orisha is a Yoruba diety. Each Orisha controls some aspect of human life. They are called by their devotees through rhythm, dance, and song. Oshun is involved with love and marriage. Drums play an important part in the ceremonies of Santeria which is the name that this religion was given in some Latin American countries. It was brought to the western hemisphere by enslaved Africans.

Carlos Santana jamming at the Cage last Friday.

Carlos Santana was born in Mexico and came to California with his guitar and started his band. The Latin influence in his music runs through many of his songs. It is no coincidence that congas, bongos, and timbales are used in his music! The musical artistry of Armando Peraza is supported by Raul Rekow and Orestes Vilato. Throughout the evening they exchanged solos with a professionalism that is not equalled in any other rock and roll band. Santana himself played congas, and then helped Graham Lear on drums doing samba, which is a Brazilian rhythm and dance with African roots.

However, Carlos Santana's solos on guitar are not what they used to be. The business side of music, instead of the creative, artistic side seems to be his guiding force.

Gnomon Copy Strike: What Does It Mean To Students?

by Angela Brown

The past two years have see a number of noted strikes in the Amherst area for which the University community has shown significant support. This support has been characterized by the older age-bracket and longer residence status of the students involved. However, the Gnomon Copy strike has the potential to involve students from across the board since Gnomon Copy, as well as copy centers in general, makes up its workforce with a significant number of students. These students are more likely to be inexperienced and from a younger age-bracket because of this fact.

The Gnomon Copy strike shows how the fact that there are so many needy students around, who must work in order to attend school, is used to the advantage of various enterprises, since an accessible pool of unemployed labor leads to conventially low wages. This combined with the fact that people who are connected to the Universi,, onstitute the largest segment of market for copy services makes the Gnomon copy strike very "close to home" for most students. This direct connection is different from those of the Amherst Nursing Home and Sterling Radiator strikes which appealed to students' sense of solidarity with labor, particularly that of older students who are closer to the entering the "real world". Students as such are more likely to be concerned with why it is that Amherst is a minumum-wage town.

ISRAELI INVASION OF WEST BEIRUT

The Israeli occupation and pacification forces continued their war of aggression against Lebanon by invading West Beirut last Thursday, Sept. 16, following the assassination of President-elect Bashir Gemayeld, the chief of the extreme right-wing Christian Phalangist militia. The Israelis, in blatant violation of the cease-fire aggreement which led to a P.L.O. evacuation of West Beirut, are attempting to physically destroy the progressive Lebanese forces in order to secure military power for the invading forces and their allies, the facist Lebanese Phalangist militia bands.

On Friday, the United Nation's Security Council condemned the Israeli invasion of West Beirut and demanded an immediate pullback. Meanwhile, Lebanese President Elias Sarkis and Prime Minister Shafik Wazzan, who have repeatedly demanded and immediate and unconditional withdrawal of the Israeli invaders from all of Lebanon, rejected the Israeli claim that 2000 P.L.O. fighters are still in war-torn West Beirut.

VIOLENCE IN EL SALVADOR

Seven dead bodies with traces of terrible tortures and firearm wounds were found on Saturday on the highway running from San Salvador to the international airport. Four of the were beheaded.

The prvious day, another five mutialated dead bodies, victims of the bloody regime, were found in a suburb of the capitol city. According to the Salvadoran Commission on Human Rights, there have been more than 3,000 political killings in El Salvador in the first six months of this year.

F.M.L.N. MAKES ADVANCES

Troops from the Farabundo Marti Liberation Front (F.M.L.N.) are reported to have staged several successful combat operations, inflicting coordinated blows on the enemy in various parts of the country over the past few days.

A U.S.-manufactured Huey UH-10 helicopter was shot down in the area of the large Ilopango air base. F.M.L.N. forces also destroyed a number of supports of electric transmission lines, which cut the supply of electricity in El Salvador.

A number of groups of patriots attacked government soldiers guarding the Golden Bridge spanning the Lempira River. The bridge was blown up by patriotic forces last October. The authorities are now trying to restore it so as to resume itsoperational transfer of punitive troops.

The insurgents' attack was so unexpected and strong that soldiers fled from their positions and were compelled to request reinforcements.

CONFLICT IN CHILE

Chilean troops, wielding clubs and tear gas grenades, dispersed a demonstration in the city of Concepcion. The demonstrators went out into the streets to protest the facist Pinochet regime, as the dictator celebrated the ninth anniversary of his "lifelong" rule.

Demonstrations were held in other Chilean cities, as the people continued their struggle againstt the dictatorship.

Pinochet stated that the most stern measures will be used against all such demonstrators. He also announced a new law making opposition to the regime punishable by death.

The dictator's threats, according to the press, were also aimed at mainstream politicans who dare to criticize the actions of his illegimate government. Political parties are still outlawed in Chile and their activities will not be allowed until the end of the current decade, he stated at the celebration.

The facists came to power as the result of the violent overthrow of the popularly elected government of President Salvador Allende. The C.I.A. has admitted that it financed that coup.

NUMMO News is the voice of Black, Latino and Asian-American students from the University of Massachusetts, and as such voices the concerns of people of color from across the world.

"Nummo is the magic power of the written and spoken word . ....", are the words that appeared in Nummo a full seven years ago. Never has this been more true than it is today, because the issues facing Black, Latino and Asian-American peoples must be clarified and addressed by people of color for themselves. For these issues and problems remain obscured and distorted by main-stream mass media and in the public eye. Often, there is just a simple silence where there should be outrage, questioning and a resolution towards action. The true voice of the Third World community is needed to ensure that these concerns are dealt with at all, never mind correcting the narrow perspective that often prevails when the controversial, and usually vital issues, are concerned. And they are not only those which are limited to the Third World peoples.....

Class requirements:
- Submit 2-3 typed articles (depending on length) per week on every Thursday;
-Attend mandatory meetings on Mondays and Wednesdays
-Attend production process twice a month.

All interested persons are invited to attend our next General Meeting, which is held on Mondays and Wednesdays at 4:30 in Room 103 of New Africa House

College life can sometimes be very monotonous. You go to your 10:00 Psychology class, History at 11:15, Lunch in the D.C. and so on. When you've come to realize it, you've spent four years at UMass without knowing any more than what you've been academically required to know. But, there is more to college life than this.

NUMMO News is offering a 3 credit class of which you should take advantage of. If you are interested in learning about the many aspects of newspaper production ranging from graphic design, journalism, political struggle, cultural awareness and preservation, photography, art, music, sports, health, cooking from various cultures, etc., etc.,.....

Any interested person is invited to contribute their talents!! Take advantage of the opportunity to expand your hidden capabilities!!

Join with NUMMO News and.....
IF YOU KNOW.....TEACH
IF YOU DON'T KNOW.....LEARN

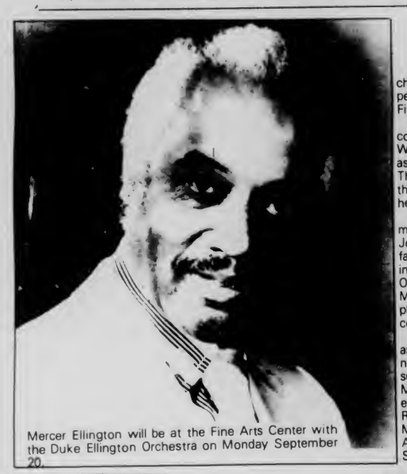
NUMMO News is presently the largest weekly Third World newspaper in the Five-College Area. It began in protest of the absence of news pertaining to black people in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian. Since then it has expanded its coverage to include other professed minorities and oppressed people. But basically NUMMO exists in order to give "the other side" of the story. In that respect NUMMO is a dynamic and influential periodical.

Because NUMMO was begotten from struggle we have to keep in mind that nothing worth having comes easy. In addition, NUMMO has a duty to keep abreast of the current political climates. NUMMO must essentially operate as a three headed entity with an eye on campus and local events, another one on national news and a third that surveys global activities. NUMMO News has the dialectical responsibility of catering to the audience at hand without becoming totally self-centered. We must understand that this burden is not a light one but that it must be borne and wrestled with by current and future staff.

NUMMO News staff are trained in all phases of newspaper production, including: reporting, writing, photography, typesetting, graphic reproduction and layout. The "each one teach one" philosophy is fully operative from 5pm Friday evening to 4:30pm Sunday afternoon in the Campus Center graphics room. Obviously there is a great deal to be gained in the area of creative development and it would be in your best interests to join our staff. NUMMO News would also benefit tremendously from organized input. The more minds that are used to put forth the printed word the more impact the newspaper will have.

This semester NUMMO is inviting interested individuals to check out what we do. These people will be shown the responsibilities and duties of the staff. NUMMO would also like to feature guest columnists, the roving photographer, a community digest and an arts/entertainment section on a regular basis. However, these features are contingent upon increased community involvement.

This semester NUMMO is offering a class whose students will consist of writer/reporters and photographers. Writer/reporters will be assigned a lecture or event to cover and write on. Articles will be due Thursday at 7pm, unless the event you were assigned to has not occured yet. Similarly, photographers will be assigned an event or person whom they must photograph. They will be required to develop their pictures Friday evening or Saturday afternoon. In addition, students will be trained in all phases of production of the newspaper. This training will be conducted at varying points in the semester.



Mercer Ellington will be at the Fine Arts Center with the Duke Ellington Orchestra on Monday September 20.

The Duke Ellington Orchestra To Perform at the Fine Arts Center

The internationally famous Duke Ellington Orchestra, under the direction of Mercer Ellington, will perform on Monday, September 20 at 8:00 p.m. at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

Mercer Ellington, the son of Duke Ellington, is a composer, arranger and a musician. Born in Washington, D.C. on November 3, 1919, he became associated with his father's band at the age of eight. This represented the beginning of a musical education that was continued more formally in New York where he studied alto saxophone and trumpet.

Mercer's first band was formed in 1939 and included musicians like Clark Terry, Dizzy Gillespie and Calvin Johnson, with arrangements by the soon to be famous Billy Strayhorn. While serving in the army during 1943-45, Mercer played in a band directed by Sy Oliver, he later formed another band with Carmen McRae as vocalist. In 1950 he worked with his father, playing E flat horn and also established the record company that bears his name....Mercer.

The band's personnel includes such fine musicians as Harold Ashby, Money Johnson and Chuck Conners, whose long association with Duke Ellington ensures authenticity of interpretation. Conducted by Mercer, the band's performances have been received enthusiastically at Wolf Trap, the Ravina Festival, Robin Hood Dell, Duke University and Steel Pier. Mercer has also appeared as guest conducter at the American Song Festival and Los Angeles' all city High School Band Contest.

Tickets for the performance are now on sale at the Fine Arts Center Box Office, open Monday through Friday, Noon to 4 p.m. Tickets are priced at 11,9 and 7 dollars for the general public and one-half price for UMass, Hampshire, MHC and Smith College students. For additional ticket information or reservations please call the Box Office at 545-2511.

Alleged Israeli slaying condemned and denied while over 200 protest

By KEN LUNDBERG
Collegian Staff

Physical blows almost resulted between shouting students on the University of Massachusetts campus yesterday when more than 200 people gathered, some to defend and some to condemn alleged Israeli involvement in the weekend massacre of Palestinian civilians.

The rally was called by the Organization of Arab Students (OAS), a UMass Recognized Student Organization. Several other groups in the area attended, offering their views on recent events in the Middle East.

On the steps of the Student Union Building at 12:15 p.m., a circle of protesters carrying pro-Palestine and pro-Palestine Liberation Organization placards was broken by students jeering claims that the Israeli government was not responsible for the killing at the West Beirut refugee camp by rightist Christian gunmen.

Under overcast skies and drizzle, protesters continued chants of "Stop U.S. arms to Israel...Stop killing our children...Long live PLO...Long live PLO."

Members of the OAS repeated chants and shouted for about 45 minutes until the crowd thinned into small clusters of people who remained to discuss the Middle East and other world issues.

"Why should the Palestinians pay the price of the Holocaust?" UMass student and OAS member Abdul Tamimi said.

"I'm not asking you to pay the price,"Rob Dines, 21, a UMass math major responded. "I am asking you to live with them (the Jews)."

"I'll live with them if they don't come as invaders," Tamimi shot back.

"I am here to inform the people of the massacre of innocent Palestinian people," Tamimi said.

"Could you put down that I don't think the Israelis did it?," Dines asked.

No actual fighting or injuries resulted from any of the heated debates that were seen throughout the crowd and no police or other officials arrived during the course of the rally.

One woman from Hadley, who said she happened upon the rally, took the opportunity to sell her hand-drawn political postcards for 50 cents a piece. She displayed a cardboard sign which read "Political Postcards --Cute and Funny."

Before the rally began, Tamimi said he came out yesterday to denounce the massacre which he said the media in the area has slanted pro-Israel and inform people whom is to blame in the slaying at the Shatila camp.

"Being Jewish and Israeli are two different things," Tamimi said. "I'm half Jewish and I'm against what's going on."

UMass student Sue Yones who was living in Palestine last June when bombing broke out, killing her 15-year-old brother, said the massacre was "just a continuation...it didn't stop them from going into houses and butchering people."

"U.S. military and economic aid has to be cut off to Israel. As long as America keeps giving military aid to the Israeli government, Israel will feel it has the right to settle all disputes with military aggression," Peter Bohmer, of the Northampton Committee on central America, said.

"We are here in support of Palestine," League said. "We have to take a stand against the Zionist white supremacy both in the U.S. and in the Middle East."

"I am a Zionist and I'm tired of fighting with the PLO every year on campus," said Richard Kirschen, 21, of the Student Alliance for Israel. "I abhor the massacre that was carried out by the Christians. But I believe Israel has a right to exist."

At one point in the rally two unidentified men shouted over opposite ends of the crowd, comparing the recent massacre in Beirut to similar events that took place during World War II in Germany.

"It (the massacre) will never happen again because you know what happened in Germany," the first man shouted from behind a pillar.

"It's happening now in Germany," the second man shouted back.

Engineering dean intends to improve program

By BRIAN TOBEY
Collegian Correspondent

The new dean of the University of Massachusetts School of Engineering intends to work with people in state industry in order to make the school "one of the ten best in the country."

Dr. James E.A. John is the former executive director on Motor Vehicle Emissions for the National Academy of Sciences, where he conducted a million dollar study on the feasibility of automobile manufacturers meeting standards set by the Clean Air Act of 1970.

"We will work together with the private sector. We have something to offer them and they have something to offer us. We offer good engineers. They offer support to provide good engineers," John said.

John is assuming the position vacated a year ago by Russell Jones, who is now vice president of academic affairs at Boston University.

John will take over in January, after ending his term as chairman of the mechanical engineering department at Ohio State University.

Acting dean Richard J. Giglio said that if there was any bias in selecting a new dean, it was toward someone with an excellent background in computer-aided design and computer-aided facilities (CAD-CAM). He said that two of the three largest CAD-CAM companies in the nation are in Massachusetts.

Dr. James John, new dean of the School of Engineering at the University of Massachusetts.

"We will work together with the private sector. We have something to offer them and they have something to offer us. We offer good engineers. They offer support to provide good engineers." John said.

I think he (John) will work very well with outside constitutents," Giglio said.

He said John will also work well with other deans, such as those of the polymer science, computer science, and psychology departments.

"Integration is very important to me and I'm sure John shares this," he said.

According to Giglio, improving the School of Engineering will be a matter of proceeding with business as usual.

"I really think he'll continue what has been happening, including some pretty dramatic growth in the school," he said.

He added that total enrollment in the School of Engineering has doubled in the past eight years.

An improvement that John intends to work on is a wider use of computers.

I'd like to see greater use of computers in all areas of teaching and research. I think there is an outstanding faculty here and it's just a matter of giving them the right tools to achieve their full potential," he said.

At Ohio State, John increased the mechanical engineering faculty from 18 to 31 members, upgraded laboratory facilities thrugh industrial involvement in research, and set up a special laboratory to integrate computer and interactive graphics into the department's entire program of teaching and research.

Reagan ordering Marines back due to Palestinian massacre

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said yesterday he is ordering the Marines back into Lebanon in the wake of the massacre of Palestinian refugees there, to help "bring that nightmare to an end."

Reagan, in a broadcast to the nation, also declared that "it is essential that Israel withdraw from Beirut."

"For our friends in Lebanon and Israel; for our friends in Europe and elsewhere in the Middle East; and for us as Americans — this tragedy, horrible as it is, reminds us of the absolute imperative of bringing peace to that troubled country and region.

"By working for peace in the Middle East, we serve the cause of world peace, and the future of mankind," he said.

Reagan said the Marines would again be joined in their mission by units from France and Italy. The same nations sent the peacekeeping force which oversaw the withdrawal of Palestine Liberation Organization fighters from Beirut early this month.

Reagan made clear that his decision to return American troops to Beirut was pinned to the recent massacre of Palestinians in their refugee camps.

"The scenes that the whole world witnessed this past weekend were among the most heart-rending in the long nightmare of Lebanon's agony. Millions of us have seen pictures of the Palestinian victims of this tragedy. There is little that words can add. But there are actions we can and must take to bring that nightmare to an end," he said.

Reagan asks for halt in railway strike

Washington (AP) — President Reagan yesterday asked Congress to bring a halt to the nationwide rail strike after talks between the railroads and engineer's union collapsed and a federal mediator reported "no reasonable prospect" of a settlement.

"The nation cannot afford a prolonged rail strike," Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis told reporters after meeting with the president. "It is clear that any long-term rail strike could have serious impact on the national defense and the economy."

Within minutes of the announcement at the White House, Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker said the House and the Senate would begin separate hearings on the president's request this morning.

Lewis said the president wants Congress to approve legislation that would impose on the railroad and engineers the recommendations of a special presidential commission established during the 60-day cooling off period that ended Sunday.

Responsibility denied in Nuke weapons bill

By STEVEN A. COHEN

BOSTON (AP) - House Speaker Thomas W. McGee denied responsibility yesterday for blocking a bill providing a statewide referendum Nov. 2 on a nuclear weapons freeze, although others said the responsibility is his alone.

Meanwhile, a letter urging McGee to act, signed by most members of the state's congressional delegation was distributed at the Statehouse by U.S. Rep. Edward Markey.

"As you know, the entire Massachusetts congressional delegation supports a nuclear weapons freeze," the letter said. "It would be unfortunate if the people of Massachusetts, who have shown so much enthusiasm for the freeze in the past, did not have the opportunity to join other Americans in voting on this important grassroots initiative."

UMass students promote voter registration drive

By KEVIN BOWE
Collegian Staff

A two day voter registration drive is being kicked off today at the University of Massachusetts in an effort to increase student involvement in the political process.

The Amherst Town Registrar will have a table from 10 am to 3 pm today and tomorrow on the Campus Center Concourse next to the information desk for anyone interested in registering. All Amherst residents over the age of eighteen are eligible to register for the gubernatorial election Nov. 2.

"In the last gubernatorial election only nine percent of the eligible voters between the ages of 18 and 24 voted. With this voter registration drive we hope to change that," said Sheila Sullivan, chairperson of the Public Policy Committee for the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA), which is sponsoring the event.

In an effort to attract attention to the drive a rally will be held outside the Campus Center by Metawampe Lawn. The rally will begin at 11:15 am with the music of Spellbound. Speakers will include officers from the Undergraduate Student Government Association (SGA), Sullivan said.

"Clearly the people who hold office have not given the attention deserved to the issues important to students. In order for students to expect consideration to be paid to such issues as decreased financial aid, increased tuition costs and student representation....on the Board of Regents, they will have to prove themselves to be a viable political force. The only way to do this is to go to the polls and vote," said Sharon Davies, Speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate.

Jim Murphy, Student Trustee and President of the SGA, said the need for students to vote is particularly important in this election because there are several referendum questions on the ballot which will have a great impact on the state in the long run.

"This election is more important (than others) because of the referendum questions. They give a degree of indirect influence in the way people live," he said.

Included as referendum questions are a constitutional amendment in favor of the death penalty; a proposed law that would allow local communities to prevent the construction of nuclear power plants or hazardous waste treatment plants in their communities against their wishes; and a proposal to repeal the Bottle Bill which was passed last year by the State Legislature. Last spring the bottling industry succeeded in gaining enough signatures to put it on the ballot this November.

Food Services looking for increase in profits

By JILL OKUN
Collegian Correspondent

The Campus Center Food Services at the University of Massachusetts has operated at a loss over the past few years, but with $750,000 worth of renovations to the Hatch, The Blue Wall, and the Top of the Campus Restaurant (T.O.C.), food service manager Richard Ellis said that he hopes to see a profit.

A lot of hard work and effort has been put forth to increase profits. "People are willing to open up to the weaknesses of last year and make some positive changes," said Bruce Aller, assistant marketing coordinator. "The department is more aggressive and organized, and feels confident that their hard work will pay off."

"We have made headway in eliminating problems and improved tremendously," said Ellis.

The $750,000 to renovate the Campus Center Food Services' facilities was borrowed from the Auxiliary Services which overlooks all UMass areas not related to academics. The Auxiliary Services money came from profits earned from conferences held at UMass. The loan is supposed to be paid back at a rate of $50,000 a year, said Bernard F. Wilkes Jr., assistant director of food services.

Wilkes said that he is confident that the loan will be paid off on schedule with extra income leftover to offset the costs of running the facilities.

"The renovation was done with the intention of its paying for itself," said Ellis. He said that he hopes to pay back the loan and make a considerable profit at the same time.

The T.O.C. on the 11th floor of the Campus Center with its relaxed atmosphere and new menu items, has already increased profits over last year. During the first two days of school, the T.O.C. had half the business that it had in the whole month of September last year. This was due to a promotion campaign aimed at drawing students' parents to the T.O.C., Aller said.

The Hatch got off to a late start this semester, because of problems with hiring enough personel, but it will no doubt turn a profit due to its impressive renovations, said Ellis. The Hatch now offers a variety of services including a deli, pizza and Italian food, a wine and cheese bar and a salad bar. New ideas are also being experimented with. For example, a make your own spaghetti dinner will be featured in the Italian food section of the hatch, he said.

Profits at the Blue Wall may suffer due to competition from other drinking places in the area. "The strength of the Blue Wall was in its convenience for freshmen and on-campus students," said Aller, but with the renovations and new atmosphere business should increase.

The coffee shop, which has not been renovated, has always shown a profit, said Ellis.

The Campus Center Food Services provides students with a choice of food at a good price Ellis said. However, there are 39 restaurants in the Amherst area drawing the business away and competing for student dollars, said Ellis. He said he believes that food services can better cope with outside competition by "giving customers more value for their dollars."

The basic thrust behind the renovation of the T.O.C., the Blue Wall, and the Hatch was to give the customers more variety, more space, and additional services to attract a larger clientele, Ellis said.

The Campus Center Food Services will now be open during the summer and intersession. Most of this business will come from conferences held at UMass and student orientations.

"Last summer we did not show a profit, but it was very close to being a border line summer," said Ellis, who anticipates a profit next summer.

Transit Authority drivers are proven safe and competent

By PAULA HOYT
Collegian Correspondent

University of Massachusetts student bus drivers demonstrated competence, safety knowledge and driving skills by sweeping the regional competition over six area bus companies in a recent Pioneer Valley Transit Authority (PVTA) "Roadeo."

"We are considered the black sheep company of all the area bus drivers," said Chip Osgood, a UMass senior and second place winner of the contest.

"UMass transit has one of the best safety records in the country and we don't get the chance to call attention to our skills," he said.

The Roadeo, held on September 12th in Springfield, involved a three part driving and safety contest between six area companies including Springfield Transit, Peter Pan and Western Massachusetts Bus Lines and Longueil Transportation.

Drivers were required to steer the cumbersome buses around serpentine corners, into reverse sharp turns, through cones, up to loading docks, and other difficult maneuvers.

In addition, drivers were given a written safety quiz and a safety inspection test, in which they looked for defects planted on the buses.

"Everyone in the competition had to be extremely competent, the driving course was difficult and required driving much harder than most normal situations," said Jeremy Rogers, first place winner.

Christine Voge, 10, of Amherst rides at Tillson Farm.

The UMass Transit System consists of about 150 bus rivers, all students, nine of whom were entered in the Roadeo. Rogers, a UMass senior, took the first place spot, nd will represent the PVTA in a four day national competition in Boston next month. Steve Pause, a graduate tudent in Environmental Science, placed third overall. he top five winners of the Roadeo received cash and rophy prizes.

"UMass Transit is elated and proud about the accomplishment and we hope this proves that our drivers re the best," said Rogers.

Heavy pedestrian flow and overcrowding of passengers are among the special problems faced by UMass bus drivers. "We probably did so well because of our experience with these situations," Rogers said.

The drivers of UMass buses work part time and are full time students with a normal course load. "Passengers often don't realize that we are students, too, and have the same pressures they do," Osgood said.

The UMass Transit System as a whole deserves credit for its well run supervision, training program, and clean safety record, said Rogers. The student bus drivers hope to receive recognition and respect for their achievements, he said.

JOHN MORRELL DIDN'T BECOME A TRAINEE AFTER COLLEGE. HE BECAME A MANAGER.

"As Executive Officer of the Army's Defense Language Institute at Monterey, California, I'm responsible for the housing, feeding and well-being of 500 students. And that's no small task. I manage an annual food budget of over a million and a half dollars. And I'm accountable for five million dollars worth of property.

"On top of managing money, I also supervise a staff of 24 people. And each one has unique problems that I have to handle on a daily basis. You better believe the leadership and management training I received in Army ROTC is paying off.

There are other good reasons for taking ROTC, too. Like scholarship opportunities. And financial assistance – up to $1,000 a year for your last two years of ROTC.

If you want a job after college that offers real challenge and real responsibility, do what John Morrell did. Take Army ROTC.

And begin your future as an officer.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Bureaucracy and neglect at its best

The day had been as expected: Tiring, and not without its stressful side. But now that the packing was completed, I felt relaxed enough to doze in the back seat of the family station wagon as my parents and I made the drive to Amherst.

Signing into the dorm went smoothly enough and we quickly began to unpack the car. The door to my room was ajar but it wasn't until we pushed the door open that we saw the cans of paint. And the dropcloths. And the paint chips. On the desk. And all over the carpet. Not to mention the overhead light hanging precariously over us, the switchplate lying on the desk, the paint on the woodwork and the outside of the windowpane and the absence of a wastebasket.

Bill Thomas

Muttered curses gave way to constructive action as we moved the paint and dropcloths out into the hall and put my stuff in the closet. "Nothing to get upset about," I told myself. "All I have to do is to tell someone about it and they'll take care of it. I mean, I paid my bill on time and returned my housing confirmation card." I was playing by all the rules so I knew the system would work for me.

The student at the sign-in desk in Baker made a quick phone call, hung up, and told me that someone would be over that evening.

"Well, that was easy enough," I thought, although my skeptical side said "sure someone will come by. And fish ride bicycles."

But no UMass employee was to make an appearance that evening, nor the next day, nor the day after that, in spite of repeated calls to the main housing maintenance office, in spite of personal appearances made by me to the area management office for Central, in spite of repeated assurances that "we'll send someone up right away."

Charlie, our hardworking janitor in Greenough, ended up vacuuming my carpet and wiping off my desk. But he is as much a victim of bureaucratic buck-passing as I am. His attempts at acting an an intermediary on my behalf were met with the same results as my efforts were - with lip service being paid to the grievance but nothing being done about the paint smeared over my window. Outcome: Eventually the student wearies of the hassles involved and tries to forget about it. After all (we think) is it worth it when we have a myriad of other responsibilities that must be attended to?

But it's a little disconcerting when you're told blatant lies such as these explanations given to me at the office of area management for the Central Residential Area:

"The problem is that it's too small a problem. They'll never get around to it." Or: "The type of paint that we need to do it isn't readily available."

The point is that there wouldn't be any problem if the painters had finished the job before school started. But they couldn't paint the ceiling (and for some reason, the woodwork) until the leak in the roof from the previous semester had been repaired. Hence the painters' solution to not being able to finish my room was to leave the stuff there. Problem? What problem? Let the next guy deal with it.

Why wasn't the roof repaired by the time that the university opened this semester? Well, it's a long story. One of gross mismanagement of tax dollars. As students bear the brunt of budget cuts in the form of reduced financial aid, the abuse of state funds continues unabated within such departments as the UMass physical plant. With the implementation of a desperately needed restructuring of the physical plant system, perhaps the state would have more money available for the education of college students.

Is US press PLO puppet?

Dan Rather once commented, "There is no such thing as objectivity in news reporting." This statement rings true when applied to the media's coverage of the Israeli occupation of Lebanon. No other event better illustrates the way the media can distort the facts.

The successful manipulation of the American press can be traced to the work of the P.T. Barnum of Middle East politics, Yassir Arafat. Like Barnum, Arafat knows that a sucker is born every minute. In fact, he found three of them all U.S. Congressmen. In a flurry of photographs and handshakes, the PLO chairman had three prestigious U.S. representatives believing that the PLO would recognize Israel's right to exist. He did this by signing a piece of paper acquiescing to all United Nations resolutions pertaining to the Palestinian question. Unfortunately, he later admitted that (in his opinion) U.N. resolutions 242 and 338, which guarantee Israel's right to exist, do not pertain to the Palestinian question. The three Congressmen are still wiping the egg off their faces.

Dave McCarthy

During the recent fighting, Mr. Arafat showed his master at manipulating the press. At press conference after press conference, he had some newspeople believing a story of mass genocide. Except, in this version, those who had been killed in the past had become the present killers. Genocide is defined as race murder. If Arafat thinks the killing of the PLO and the extermination of the Palestinian people are one in the same, he is either a dreamer or a fool. The PLO is no more the representative of the Palestinians than the I.R.A. is the representative of the Irish.

Another manipulation of the press concerned Israel's dislocation of civilians in West Beirut.

To give a brief background, Lebanon has always had a Christian majority and a Moslem minority. Eight years ago, when the PLO infiltrated the Lebanese countryside, some Moslem sects harbored the PLO in hopes of creating a coalition that would some day eradicate the Christians in a blaze of Islamic furvor. So when Israel decided to remove the PLO threat to the north, it had to go to the source. That source was the cities that harbored the Israeli enemy.

It is a shame that innocent people were killed. But that is the PLO way: to cowardly hide among the civilians. So by sympathizing and harboring the PLO, Moslem guerillas must take a major responsibility for the destruction of West Beirut.

No rational person can condone the destruction inflicted by either side. So many variables, including the recent killing of Palestinian refugees, blur the lines of who is right and who is wrong. But the American media has painted Israel as the villian, and the PLO as the oppressed. It will be interesting to watch if the media's slant vascillates in response to new fighting between Moslems and Christian Phlangists. With atrocities being committed on both sides, the painting of one side being right and the other being wrong has me wondering if the press has lost its senses.

There is no excuse for the murder of innocent people

To the Editor:

The Hebrew people will never forget March 1944 and the Nazi terrorism. The Lebanese and Palestinian people will never forget 1936, 1948, 1967, and 1982 and the Zionist terrorism. To help the people of Lebanon, Israel pushed 185,000 fully equipped soldiers against civilians and homeless people to restore the so called peace and in the name of humanity.

Because of this action, 30,000 people were killed in one month.

Later, the president-elect of Lebanon was killed for his refusal to sign a treaty with Israel. After that more than 1,000 palestinian civilians in Sabra and Shatela refugee camps were eliminated. Now, after the P.L.O. left Beirut; what is the Zionist excuse for killing more people? What kind of people could allow 1,000 innocent refugees to be murdered?

Above all, are they going to pull out? No!! We know all the answers. As they pulled out of the West Bank in 1967, they will pull out of Lebanon in 1982!!!!

Their dream is the "promised land" which is Palestine, Lebanon, Syria, Jordan and Iraq. Also, new settlements, Lebanese water...etc. So far they have changed in Lebanon highway names (Sharon's Highway), Banks (Eliate Bank), airlines (E'Al), currency, army, the identity of Lebanese and Palestinian people and still more to come...

We promise to fight injustice and fascism and we need your support.

Five-college courses are still available and accessible

To the Editor:

An article published the first day of this semester about the Five College Interchange System erroneously gave the impression that a student could only take a course off-campus if a similar one was not offered here. Not true! The entire curriculum of Amherst College, Smith College, Mount Holyoke College and Hampshire College are available — with no reservations— to all UMass students except first semester freshmen. I will be registering students into fall courses off-campus in Machmer in E 27A up until September 24. Only if the course is in the student's major need the student ha: anyone else's permission to take the course if enrollment is still open.

Third World student urged to attend meeting

UMass Third World students of the University of Massachusetts are urged to attend the annual Third World Organizational Fair to be held Saturday September 25, 1982 from 7-9 pm in the Student Union Ballroom.

"The purpose of the fair is to inform and recruit Third World Students for various Third World organizations such as AHORA, AFRIK-AM, BCP, BLACK AFFAIRS, ASA and others," said Nelson Acosta, active member of the office of Third World Affairs.

"Whether we are Black, Latino, Asian or other, we all come from communities where the culture and traditions and the issues confronting our lives are preserved and promoted," said Tony Crayton, former director of the Office of Third World Affairs.

"Here in Amherst" said Crayton, "we are in another world. The things which hold us together at home are foreign to the majority of the population in Amherst."

"Third World organizations exist to provide a consistent means of bringing us together based on the love of our respective cultures and our willingness to share that culture," said Crayton.

"Experience can be gained by becoming involved in Third World organizations, experience which enhances your ability to compete in 'the real world,'" said Crayton.

Presentations will be made by members of all Third World organizations and tables will be set up for registration. In addition, live entertainment will be provided by Magnum Force!

"This should be one of our most productive years. Ongoing relationships have been established between Third World organizations and the Third World faculty, which should enhance our effectiveness and add to the quality of our programs and activities," said Crayton.

One important note to remember is that none of this will work if we don't have people to participate. Your support is desperately needed in order to make this year one of the most successful years in UMass history. We, the editors of BLACK AFFAIRS are looking forward to seeing you on Saturday night.

Those who profess to favor freedom and depreciate agitation are the people who want crops to grow without plowing up the ground they want rain without thunder and lightning they want the ocean without the awful roar of its waters power concedes nothing without struggle.

John Cheever's reputation remains

Books

OH WHAT A PARADISE IT SEEMS
By John Cheever
By ROGER ATWOOD
Collegian Staff

Right after a well-known author's death, his work usually undergoes a period of careful re-appraisal by his most knowledgeable students. Lectures are given, papers are written, symposiums are held on the most influential — all to assess the contributions of a particular, deceased author.

We are now entering that reflective period for Massachusetts writer John Cheever, whose death over the summer leaves us with four decades' work of novels, short stories and essays. His posthumous reputation will remain as strong as it was in life. But unfortunately his last work is far from his best. Though this very short novel follows through on the unity and delicacy of prose that we expect from Cheever, it appears flat, directionless and ultimately incomplete compared to much of his earlier work.

The problem with Oh What a Paradise It Seems is not really in its prose or structure, but the simplistic characters that move through the book like bronze-plated statuettes. Few characters bear the gentle shading and originality of Falconer or the short stories. We see any number of suburban housewives, corrupt small-town politicians, and a New York City career girl who keeps saying to her lover, "You don't understand the first thing about women." Only rarely do these highly traditional characters seem to speak, move and breathe.

Worst of all is Cheever's snobbish portrayal of the Salazzo family. This is a morally-depraved family, he seems to say, and it suffers from avarice, wrath and all the other Seven Deadly Sins — plus an eighth. The Salazzos have committed the unpardonable sin of having bad taste. They live in a ticky-tacky split-level, watch TV game shows and shoot the dog in the backyard when it gets to be too much of a bother. They are on the last, lowest rung of the middle-class, until venality leads Mr. Salazzo to some dirty but lucrative work. The villainous Salazzos are guilty not just of personal corruption, but of their status as parvenues. Cheever has made a profession of writing on the triumphs and disgraces of the middle- and upper-class. Now his pen turns viciously to the spoilers of suburban — the noveau riche. This kind of class-ism is not worthy of Cheever.

The central character in Paradise is Lemuel Sears, an aging businessman who finds himself in a whirlwind romance with young Renee Herndon. Just as their relationship starts to bust, he returns to the village of his birth to find his beloved Beasley Pond despoiled, a heap of rubbish — it has been rezoned as fill. In and around these dual conflicts, Cheever goes into long, beautifully-told but unfulfilling nostalgia for the times when "the horizons of his country were dominated by the beautiful and lachrymose wine-glass elm tree and when most of the bathtubs one stepped into had lions' claws."

Paradise is full of breathtaking passages like this. Indeed, Cheever's prose remains as graceful and beautifully enigmatic as ever. What his work lacks is a cast of scrutable characters. Still, it is a comment on Cheever's prodigious talents as a writer — and today's slackening standards in fiction — that despite its failings, Paradise is probably one of the best novels of the year.

It's official: the NFL is now on strike

NEW YORK (AP) — The National Football League Players Association, unable to negotiate a guaranteed piece of a billion dollar pie, on Monday called the first regular-season strike in the sport's history, effective after that night's Green Bay Packers-New York Giants game.

The first game affected will be Thursday night, between the Atlanta Falcons and the Chiefs in Kansas City.

"At the conclusion of tonight's game, the league will be struck," said union president Gene Upshaw, a guard for the Los Angeles Raiders. "No practices, no workouts, no games will be played until management engages in good-faith bargaining."

"We are united. We are prepared to withhold our services for as long as it takes. The players of the NFL, as of tonight, will be on strike. We did not want to get into this position but we are forced to get management to bargain with us."

Ed Garvey, the union's exeecutive director, said the players hope the strike "will force the owners to start bargaining."

Jack Donlan, executive director of the NFL Management Council, bargaining arm of the owners, said the owners "regret that the union has chosen this path. The only differences between us seems to be length of a new contract and whether the players will be paid by individual negotiations or by means of a wage scale tied to a fund.

"Therefore, we will proceed with our scheduled executive committee meeting tonight and determine our course of action. After we have informed our member clubs of our decisions and what actions they should take, we will explain our position to the public."

The league responded to the strike with a two-sentence statement: "We are hopeful that negotiations will resume promptly aimed at reaching a solution. Any further comment will come from the NFL Management Council."

The strike, the second mid-season interruption of American professional sports in less than two years, revolves around money. A 50-day strike by major-league baseball players last summer dealt with movemnent of free agents between teams.

The players, who the union says are paid an average of $83,000 a season, want a guaranteed 50 percent share of the clubs' $2.1 billion television contract plus a wage scale based on seniority.

The owners, through Donlan, have flatly rejected the ideas of wage scales and guaranteed percentages of any revenue for the players.

The difference in the costs of the packages demanded by the players and offered by the owners is negligible. The players want $1.6 billion over four years; the owners have offered $1.6 billion over five years.

The union said it had filed a new unfair-labor-practice charge with the National Labor Relations Board on Monday following an announcement by the management council that it was "unalterably opposed" to bargaining for a wage scale.

The owners have a multimillion-loan guarantee to tide them over, but Garvey said the union has no strike fund.

"However," he continued, "the players have been preparing for this for two years. We'll be able to weather the storm."

The executive council's strike vote was unanimous. The only member of the board not present was John Bunting of the Philadelphia Eagles. He was delayed by a rail strike.

Elvin Bethea of Houston, a member of the committee, said: "This was a real trying decision that we had to make. We deeply regret it but feel it was the just and right thing to do."

Some of the members of the council, including Stan White of the Detroit Lions, said players will not play or work out until they have a signed agreement. "We have to have an agreement before we go back to work. We have learned that we can't trust them, the owners, without something in writing."Said Garvey: "The era of trust is over."

But Upshaw said the players could return "if there are meaningful negotiations with the league."

Asked if the union was worried that teams might try to stage games with rookies and free agents, Washington's Mark Murphy said: "It is an idle threat. Management ruined the preseason forever when it tried to play games in 1974. I don't think the owners want to ruin the integrity of the regular season now."

Garvey said the union expected injured players to continue receiving medical treatment from the teams, "but do not believe they will be paid."

Union officials contend more than 90 percent of the league's 1,500 players will honor the strike and refuse to play.

Back to being Patsies like the good old days

By ELLIOT KALB
Collegian Correspondent

The New York Jets defeated the New England Patriots by a score of 31-7 last Sunday. The game was not as close as the final score would indicate. The Patriots lost this one when the league offices put out their schedule. It's nice to know that even with all this talk about parity, there are some things in this football season we can depend on.

AP Laserphoto

It's between the Colts and Pats for the bottom.

Commentary

The New England Patriots have a lousy football team. They have a lousy football organization. They play in a lousy stadium and they have pretty lousy fans.

They are the "Patsies" of the NFL again, just like the good old days. Without meaning to give a history of the organization of the team, the Sullivans once hired a respectable Oklahoma football coach named Chuck Fairbanks, and he drafted well and traded well and built himself a club that rose to 11-3 in 1976. Fairbanks had control of the team, a team that many experts continued to call the most talented group of players in the league.

Something happened to that team. Their coach quit for the greener pastures of the University of Colorado. The team never did win a playoff game. The players dispersed through injury, age, and disenchantment.

Ron Erhadt was given the coaching reins. He was not a bad coach. In fact, he currently has a better head coaching record than does Super Bowl champion coach Bill Walsh of the 49ers. Walsh is labelled a "genius" while Erhadt was chased out of New England.

Ron Myers is the new head coach, sporting a tough no-nonsense policy with his players. Players that no one is mistaking for being among the best talent in the NFL.

The Patriots' best player right now is punter Rich Camarille. The offense gained 57 yards in 44 plays from scrimmage on Sunday against the Jets. Camarille punted for 382 yards (8 punts, for a 47.8 average), consistently giving the Pats good field position. There are others (running back Tony Collins and nose tackle Lester Williams, for instance) who show promise. Still others, like linebacker Steve Nelson, show flashes of brilliance. Overall though, there just isn't a lot of talent.

The Patriots should feel grateful for the Baltimore Colts. They may be worse. In the last two seasons, not counting the contests when they played each other, the "Patsies" and the Lame Colts have a combined record of 2-28.

At least the Colts and their fans can take solace by remembering Johnny Unitas, Don Shula Super Bowl IV, etc.

That Pats are once again the "Patsies", among the lower echelon of the National Football League. Nothing more, nothing less, nothing new.

More important than offense or defense lapses, the Patriots begin painting their picket signs this morning as they join their fellow laborers in a strike. As reported here in past weeks, the strike action is likely to be short and ineffective, with much less than 100 percent support.

There is no need to panic yet.

But, just in case, is it the Ottowa Roughriders or the Ottowa Rough Riders? And where the hell is Ottowa, anyway?

UM rugby king of HC hill

By SCOT COOPER
Collegian Correspondent

Playing on a rugby pitch that could best be described as lousy last Saturday, the UMass rugby club took two games and tied one against Holy Cross at Worcester.

The UMass A side scored quickly and never let the Crusaders get going en route to a 21-0 victory. The UMass Killer B's played a very sluggish first half, but dug in and earned a 9-9 tie in the second half. In the final game the High C's finished the afternoon by defeating the Holy Cross C's 28-0.

It took the A side less than five minutes to show Holy Cross that they didn't have much hopes of winning. Dave Brown flipped the ball to George Economou who worked a give and give back with Chris Todd to open the scoring. Sean Kinneen's kick after try was wide.

The field, which was sloped a little bit like Mt. Tom, helped UMass forwards Kevin Connors, Bob Clark, and Stefan Rutherford keep the Crusaders at the base of the hill. Following a missed Holy Cross penalty kick, Duncan McKay set up Chris Todd to put UMass up by eight.

The shoddy condition of the field and the fact that the UMass pack (forwards) weren't allowing Holy Cross any space to advance the ball uphill, made it quite clear that UMass would soon be touching the ball down in the end zone. That score came on the nicest play of the afternoon.

Captain Mike DaCampo passed the ball to outside center Kevin Lyons. Lyons had one man to beat and he beat him badly and went in for the score.

A Kinneen penalty kick and a late score by Greg Tawa accounted for the final score. Holy Cross did manage one strong scoring attempt, but they were stopped inches from the goal line by McKay.

The Killer B's had the disadvantage of starting on the bottom of the hill in their clash. Player-coach Glenn Conway didn't even want to talk about the first half.

UMass was found guilty of being offsides and Holy Cross took a penalty kick and made it for three points.

The contact in the B game was intense. When you can hear the sound of the hits across the field before you hear the grunts, it's obvious that there's going to be a Bengay party after the game and such was the case Saturday. Curtis Linn stopped two Holy Cross scoring attempts with tough tackles. Holy Cross reciprocated when they swamped Bob Appleyard, drove him to the ground, and tried to drill for oil with his head.

Late in the first half, a penalty to HC's Gus Smith gave the keys to the end zone to Martin Bluck. He also booted the extra points.

Holy Cross zipped back to take the lead just before halftime with a try by Rob Davis and the extra point try was good.

Bluck finished off the day with nine points when he poked a penalty kick through the uprights.

Spikers third in tourney

By BOB BROCK
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's varsity volleyball team opened their 1982 season with an impressive third place finish in the 16 team UMass Invitational Tournament held this past weekend.

The tournament, consisting of teams throughout the Northeast, was won by West Point as they defeated Keene State in the championship match.

The Minutewomen opened the tournament against the Universityof Maine and prevailed 15-10, 15-11. UMass' next opponent was Eastern Nazarene College who dealt the spikers a serious setback, 11-15, 10-15.

UMass regained their composure quickly however, as they crushed the University of Bridgeport, 15-1, 15-9.

They then advanced to the tourney semi-finals by beating Brown University, 15-9, 15-6. Hopes for a tournament championship were crushed in the next match, however, as West Point dropped the Minutewomen 8-15, 11-15.

The Minutewomen took third place in the consolation match as they defeated Smith College 15-3, 19-17.

Overall, coach Elaine Sortino was pleased with the performance of her team. She singled out the fine play of sophomore co-captain Patty Grant and sophomore Kirsten Smith. She was also impressed with the performances of freshmen Sally Mahar and Sue Mudry. Senior co-captain Patty Philbin also played in her usual top form, according to Sortino.

The Minutewomen will be in action again tonight at 6:00 p.m. when they host the University of Lowell.

Gnomon strikers rally, set to negotiate today

By DAVID LINTON
Collegian Correspondent

Striking Gnomon Copy Service employees would have to be put on a waiting list based on seniority in order to start working again according to Gnomon co-owner Catherine Iannachino.

"The issue is that they don't want to work. If they wanted their jobs they'd be in here instead of the people I've hired," Iannacchino said.

About 30 to 40 striking workers and supporters picketed outside the store for a 50 cent wage increase, some form of health insurance, and better working conditions before they return to work, Mary-Erin Crook, spokesperson for the strikers said.

"We never wanted to do this in the first place. They (the management) say we put a gun to their heads but we feel we have been forced into striking," she said.

Yesterday's demonstration preceeds strike negotiations set for 4 p.m. today. The negotiations were to be held on August 31 but co-owner Roland Wetherbee's father died late last month and Wetherbee requested a two week delay.

"Roland has commitments to his mother. He is an only child and he had to be there," said Iannacchino.

However, both co-owners were in and out of the store the day after the funeral and the delay was only an excuse for putting off the negotiations said Crook.

United Electrical Union local 264 Representative David Cohen said the Gnomon owners would not talk until after September 15 because of Wetherbee's father's death and because "they had more important things on their minds."

"Neither of us has ever been in management before. I was only here for three weeks. They could have waited. They think that they're in a better financial position because we don't have nine stores to back us up," Iannacchino said.

Iannacchino said she has lost far better than 50 percent of their business. Crook said business has gone down 80 to 90 percent.

Iannacchino said during the time they bought the store on August 13 and before the employees went on strike on September 8, the workers "were working but they weren't working well." She said the employees had friends hanging around the store behind the counters and that they ate their lunches on the counters and outside. She said the workers had "sloppy business practices."

Cohen said that the union made a proposal to put off the negotiations about the language of the contract until later in September when the owners said they would not negotiate the contract until after September 15. Cohen said the main issue was the pay increase.

Iannacchino said she offered a two and a half percent pay increase as an act of good faith. "All I wanted them to do was clean up their act," she said.

Cohen said the management's offer was unacceptable because the employees have not had a wage increase in 20 months. He said he made another offer for an immediate 50 cent wage increase with a promise to straighten out the owner's complaints in two weeks.

The offer included an agreement to give back the 50 cent increase if the complaints weren't straightened out in the two weeks, Cohen said.

"We said we would put it in writing but the management wouldn't agree," he said.

"I can't speculate if they intend to bargain. I'm not sure of their intentions. We hope they will negotiate," Cohen said.

Amherst selectmen pick Del Castilho for town manager

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

City Manager of Durham, N.C. Barry L. Del Castilho, selected from a field of more than 100 candidates for the office of Amherst town manager by a unanimous vote of the Board of Selectmen, accepted the position yesterday.

"We are all delighted," Chairperson Edith Wilkinson said of the board's reaction to Del Castilho's acceptance, calling his selection "a strong consensus between the Board of Selectmen and the Citizens Interview Committee," the two groups which interviewed the final 11 candidates this month.

Del Castilho graduated from Brown University in 1969 and received a Master's degree in Public Administration from the Maxwell School of Syracuse University in 1972. Since then, he has held increasingly more responsible positions in the municipal government of Durham, including Administrative Assistant, Assistant Budget Director, Assistant City Manager, Director of Public Safety, and, since 1980, City Manager.

When he takes over in Amherst in mid-December, Del Castilho will permanently fill the position resigned by A. Louis Hayward on April 30 and filled temporarily since then by Superintendent of Public Works Stanley P. Ziomek.

"New England is the big reason," Del Castilho said yesterday of his and his wife's decision to move to a smaller town, as well as having "lost touch" in a growing city of 100,000.

"I'm stuck at this desk and I can't get out and see the people that I feel I'm supposed to be working for," Del Castilho said.

Having received a "very good" reception from people he met in Amherst, Del Castilho said he had two main questions for them coming into the job: "How did they feel about their form of government? (a town meeting system unique to New England) And how did they feel about the (Town Hall) staff?" He said he received a "very positive" response on both concerns.

Although Del Castilho will be moving into the position in a town considerably smaller than Durham, Wilkinson said she anticipates he will have little trouble adjusting.

"We have the same problems (as Durham), only on a smaller level," Wilkinson said.

"We were looking for the skills and training and experience of a town manager," she said. In Del Castilho, "we found a candidate who qualifies on all levels."

"He will bring to Amherst an unusually strong backgrouns in all areas of municipal management. His experience as budget officer and public safety director give him particular strength in these areas. He also has proven ability in the areas of personnel relations, long range planning, and the ability to work well with many different groups."

The duties of the full-time job include administering the business of the town and assuring that policy made by the Board of Selectmen is followed by the various departments and agencies within the town.

Comment cards encouraged by D. C.

BY JIM FINKLE
Collegian Correspondent

"What is it we did well...or not so well...let us know how we can serve you better," begins each food service comment card.

"Comment cards are a way for students to communicate with Food Services," according to assistant director of Menu Services Josephine Keeley. The subjects of comments range from complaints about long lines to the way food is served, she said.

Changes made as a result of comment cards include the use of diet salad dressings, decaffeinated coffee, and the hot chocolate machines.

Students also requested non-smoking areas, plants in the Basics dining area, music in Franklin Commons and vegetarian offerings on weekends.

"I like the chicken and tuna salad, but the bagels are hard," said one card.

"Add more cold cuts, especially roast beef and turkey," said another.

Other cards are not as constructive.

"Get new cooks," somebody requested.

In most cases, if a request is reasonable, a change is made, Keeley said. However, often there are economic, time or other reasons for not making a change.

One student suggested serving juice at all meals. This change could not be made because of the high cost of juice, according to a comment card bulletin.

After filling out the cards, which are available at all cashier stands, students place them in one of the wooden comment card boxes in each dining common.

The manager of the particular dining common is the first person to read the card, Keeley said. If any immediate action is required the manager will take care of that right away, she added.

Next, the cards are read by director of Food Services Marie Cappadonna. She directs various departments to make any specific changes, sending the remaining cards to Menu Services.

The Lebanese Parliament selected Amin Gemeyal, the 39 year-old brother of assassinated President-Elect Bashir Gemeyal, to be that country's new President.

Gemayal's brother elected by Lebanon's Parliament

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Amin Gemayel, elected president yesterday by the Lebanese Parliament, represents but one faction of the nation's Christians, who were united in the 1975-76 civil war but later fell into murderous political and family feuds.

Divisions among Christians, who have dominated Lebanon politically and economically since it became independent in 1943, are as much a problem for Gemayel as the rift between Christians and Moslems.

Christian animosities may have played a role in the assassination of Maronite Christian President-elect Bashir Gemayel — Amin's younger brother — and the massacre of Palestinians at the Sabra and Chatilla camps in Beirut last week.

No one claimed responsibility for Bashir Gemayel's death. But high on the list of his enemies — along with the Palestinians and Moslems he had battled — were two prominent Maronites, former presidents Camille Chamoun and Suleiman Franjieh.

Gemayel's Phalange Party has blamed Israel's ally in Southern Lebanon, rebel Lebanese Army Maj. Saad Haddad, a Greek Catholic, for the Palestinian masssacre. Haddad has denied it.

Israel blamed the Phalangists. A group called the "Front for the Liberation of Lebanon from Foreigners" claimed responsibility.

The Christians earned the adjective "rightist" from their resistance to political change. Under the 1943 National Pact, the president must be a Maronite Christian and the ratio of Christian to Moslem deputies must be six to five. Christians control all government institutions, including the army and the secret service.

Marines stay indefinite: Reagan

WASHINGTON — President Reagan said yesterday "we have no way of guessing" how long U.S. Marines will be stationed in Beirut as part of a multinational peacekeeping force.

Reagan, who announced Monday that American forces will return to the war-torn country, also declined to say whether the Marines will be in greater danger on this mission than they were the last time. "I don't think there's any answer to that," he said.

As to the length of the Marines' stay, Reagan said, "We have no way of guessing nor would we speculate on what the time would be."

Reagan spoke with reporters briefly during a picture-taking session in the oval office with U.S. arms negotiators.

At the State Department, meanwhile, spokesman John Hughes, in the administration's most explicit statement on the subject, said Israel bore some responsibility for the massacres in Palestinian refugee camps in west Beirut.

Beirut peacekeepers to return

JERUSALEM (AP) — The Israeli government yesterday approved the plan to send U.S., Italian and French peacekeepers back to Beirut, where the confirmed death toll from a frenzy of bloodletting in two refugee camps climbed to 304.

With support from the Moslem leaders who tried to block his brother's election, Maronite Christian Amin Gemayel was chosen president of Lebanon during a special Parliament session held one week after President-elect Bashir Gemayel was assassinated.

Israel pulled more of its troops out of west Beirut, which it seized in what it called a peacekeeping move following Bashir Gemayel's murder. But the Israelis kept an overnight curfew in force in the predominantly Moslem sector for a third night.

Prime Minister Menachem Begin's Cabinet, after a 5½-hour meeting in Jerusalem, announced that it endorsed reconstitution of the 2,100-man force that left Beirut earlier this month after evacuation of the main body of PLO fighters.

Cabinet Secretary Ban Meriahr said the government also called for a committee of five nations — Israel, Lebanon, the United States, Italy and France — "to insure that in the new circumstance, the bloody terror will not be renewed."

But he said the Cabinet rejected President Yitzhak Navan's call for an Israeli investigation of the slaughter last Thursday and Friday at the Sabra and Chatilla refugee camps. Meriahr said only that government would discuss "the manner to conduct an appropriate examination into the facts."

New Right defeated on prayer bill filibuster

WASHINGTON — The Senate refused again yesterday to break a liberal filibuster against legislation designed to put organized prayer back in the public schools.

The test suggested the measure is doomed, with one schoolprayer opponent declaring that "The Constitution is secure once more."

The vote against the talkathon was 53 to 47, meaning Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and his conservative allies fell seven short of the 60 votes needed to limit the debate to 100 hours.

A third cloture attempt was scheduled for today. But yesterday's outcome indicated that Senate liberals now have the strength to block an up or down vote on the touchy prayer issue.

As soon as the vote was announced, Sen. Daniel P. Moynihan, D-N.Y., declared, "The Senate has prevailed. The Constitution is secure once more."

Both sides had predicted an extremely close vote on the motion for cloture.

The vote was seen as a critical test of Helms' strength on school prayer, the second social issue to be debated in the Senate in the last month.

Helms, R-N.C., and his New Right followers suffered a bruising defeat last week when the Senate rejected a watered down anti-abortion package he had sponsored.

Arkansas reporter can protect murder source

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — A newspaper editor doesn't have to reveal to defense lawyers the source of a published statement that implicates a murder defendant, a judge ruled yesterday.

Circuit Judge Randall Williams also denied a motion to disqualify the prosecution for bias and affirmed a previous order denying bond for the defendant, Mary Orsini. He said he expected the trial to begin Sept. 30.

The source provided John Robert Starr, managing editor of the Arkansas Democrat, with the sworn statment of Eugene James Hall, 43. Mrs. Orsini's lawyers have asked Williams to dismiss the charge because of pretrial publicity, including Hall's confession.

Hall said Mrs. Orsini hired him to arrange the slaying of Alice McArthur, 41, who was shot in the head July 2.

The newspaper published almost all of the confession, which filled more than two pages, on Sept. 2. In an agreement negotiated with the prosecutor, Hall pleaded guilty last week to first-degree murder in the slaying July 2 of Alice McArthur, 41. He has been sentenced to life in prison.

Mrs. Orsini's lawyers also wanted the prosecutor and his staff disqualified from prosecuting Mrs. Orsini on grounds that they are prejudiced against her.

Hall's confession said he hired Larry Darnell McClendon, 27, of Little Rock for the killing and that McClendon pulled the trigger when Mrs. McArthur was killed. McClendon and Mrs. Orsini, 35, of North Little Rock are charged with capital murder in Circuit Court. Mrs. McArthur's husband, William, a lawyer, has been booked by the sheriff for conspiracy to commit capital murder, but has not been charged in Circuit Court.

Hall said in his confession that Mrs. Orsini told him McArthur would pay $25,000 for the murder.

Voter registration turnout low

By SAM CHALFEN
Collegian Staff

Jazz music floated out of the doors of the near empty Student Union Ballroom yesterday while dozens of red, blue, white and yellow balloons were offered out free to those who asked. The balloons read, "I registered to vote today."

Although the student turnout at the Ballroom was so small student government officials almost cancelled the short speeches they had planned, but about 500 students registered in the Campus Center's concourse and showed that there is not total apathy throughout the population here.

Student Government Association President Jim Murphy said, that a low student turnout was expected, because the 18 to 24 year old age group traditionally has shown less desire to vote than older age groups.

"People have to discover the value of the vote," Murphy said, adding, "Enfranchisement is not just a quick and easy thing."

In the Campus Center Concourse, five women from the Amherst Town Hall's Registrar's Office sat answering questions and filling out registration applications of a nearly constant stream of students who saw the signs, the balloons and their chance to, in many cases, avoid last year's mistake of forgetting to register to vote.

One student, Lisa Shanor, 25, a second year student in the Stockbridge School of Agriculture, said the last elections, which were really important to her, "just kind of passed me by." She said after Ronald Reagan was elected president she began to take voting in a more serious light.

Steven White, 24, a Graduate Student in labor studies department, said voting had become more important to him as he became more politically aware through his major of study. Registering to vote yesterday, he said he'd forgotten to get an absentee ballot for the primary elections held earlier this month because of his recent move to the area from Boxborough.

"It was a rough time to vote this year," he said. "As a student, you had to register to vote in August, before you've even found a place to live, and then move in in September."

Whatever the reasons, students, did turn up to register. A quick count of the registration forms revealed that about 500 students had put their names down. But Sheila Sullivan, Chairperson of the SGA's committee on Public Policy and coordinator of the publicity for yesterday's and today's events, was happy about the levels of turnout.

Aware of the generally low levels of student voting habits, she said, "If we can get them registered, that's one step closer to getting a higher student vote."

Sullivan also noted that many students were aware of the gubernatorial race but not as informed about the lieutenant governor's race, the other races and four referenda in this year's elections. Some state senators and representatives, the Attorney General, the Governor's Council and two Congressional district races are also taking place this year.

In addition, referenda on capital punishment, new nuclear power plants and radioactive waste disposal sites, the bottle bill, and financial aid provisions for private schools may be on the ballot, although the list has not been officially declared.

Town of Amherst registrars will be at tables from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. today in the Campus Center Concourse to help register anyone and to answer questions about voting.

UMass professor to open pest-control lab by Southwest

By BILL WALL
Collegian Staff

In an effort to develop environmentally sound insecticides and inform the public of the dangers of toxins presently in use, University of Massachusetts' Environmental Science Professor Haim Gunner said yesterday that he has decided to open a pest-control laboratory in Amherst.

Gunner said he will serve as president and director of research for the laboratory sponsored by Rush-Hampton Industries of Florida, which will be located on Fearing Street in Amherst, near the Southwest Residential Area of UMass.

The laboratory will be concerned with "developing ecologically compatible agents for pest control" said Gunner.

Gunner said he feels there is too much use of insecticides which are "foreign to the environments in which they are being used.

"We don't know the ultimate results of these chemical insecticides. We have to get rid of them," he said.

Gunner said there is "a great pressure" to eliminate use of chemicals and "my work is using micro-organisms from the environment of the insects to be controlled. I am against introduction of foreign agents into controlling pests."

He said he was willing to offer his research to private industry but there was a "resistance" to change from existing methods of insect control. "I was driven" into setting up a laboratory, he said.

Gunner said he has done some consulting to industries and laboratories but this is his first private venture and the first work he has done for Rush-Hampton. Rush-Hampton has sponsored a house in South Amherst for the monitoring of indoor pollution under the direction of Salvatore DiNardi, an associate professor in the School of Public Health at UMass, said Gunner.

He said he hopes that through his research and eventual production of biological pest controls he will "get the public to understand that biological controls are effective. We've got to generate public awareness of the dangers of pesticides (as presently used). (It is necessary) to leave some pests to maintain ecosystems' balance. Control pests, but don't eliminate them."

Second protest rally on Lebanon massacre to be held tomorrow

By MICHELLE MURRAY
Collegian Staff

A second rally to protest the massacre of Palestinian and Lebanese civilians is being organized by the Organization of Arab Students (OAS) for Thursday in front of the Student Union Building at the University of Massachusetts.

The rally will begin at noon and feature speakers from the Third World Women's Task Force of the UMass Everywomen's Center and the Northampton Committee on Central America. The rally will move from the Student Union to Amherst Center.

A member of the OAS, who asked not to be named, said the second rally was necessary for people to express their feelings because Monday's rally was impromptu and organizers were not able to cover all the issues. Demonstrators will march from UMass to Amherst Center to get the participation of more concerned people, he said.

Monday's rally was an emotional confrontation between students of differing opinions. The OAS representative said he thought there was "a lot of intensity" at the first rally but he did not anticipate any violence on Thursday.

"It will be a very peaceful demonstration to protest the massacre and to show people's concern," he said.

The OAS spokesman said he thinks President Reagan's initiative to send peacekeeping forces into Beirut comes too late and intervention should have taken place immediately after the Palestine Liberation Organization evacuation from the city.

El Salvador floods cause deaths

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — The death toll from floods and mud slides set off by torrential rains climbed to 489 yesterday in El Salvador's worst natural disaster in 17 years.

In Guatemala, authorities estimated there were at least 100 weather-related deaths. They said more than 20 flood-swollen rivers had cut off large stretches of highways, leaving many parts of the country isolated.

Green Cross Director Roberto Cruz said his rescue teams had recovered 250 bodies from the Montebello section of northeast San Salvador, where flood waters from the slopes of the San Salvador volcano crashed through a retaining wall before dawn Sunday, burying hundreds of houses under 10 feet of mud.

HIS FIRST YEAR OUT OF COLLEGE, FRANK QUACKENBUSH RENOVATED THREE BUILDINGS, WORKED ON A DAM, PAVED A ROAD, AND BUILT TWO CHOPPER PADS.

Most of the engineers I graduated with probably wound up as assistant engineer to somebody else. Maybe doing the details for somebody else's design or supervising some small aspect of construction.

But my first year as an engineer in the Army I've designed many of the projects and supervised the construction on everything from electrical layouts to the concrete work on a dam. Earthmoving, grading till the paving, concrete work, masonry and more. I've supervised it.

Whether I stay in the Army or go into construction work later, I've got experience that some engineers won't have when they're 30.

Development theorists wrong says Methodist Church rep

By JILL MCCRAE
Collegian Correspondent

International development organizations fail to consider basic social, cultural, and political realities in their development programs, said a representative of the United Methodist Church, in a lecture Monday night at the University of Massachusetts.

Anita Anand, a member of the United Methodist Church's Board of Church and Society, addressed a group of thirty people in a lecture sponsored by the Third World Women's Task Force.

Anand, in her lecture "Women and Development," discussed what she called the tendency of development theorists to view situations almost entirely from an economic standpoint.

"Increased gross national product cannot reliably indicate whether the essential needs of a population are being met," she said.

Anand discussed what she called flaws of development models based on ideological, utopian, moralistic-idealistic thinking with special reference to women.

As stated in her pamphlet, "Rethinking Women and Development: The Case for Feminism," Anand said it has yet to be realized that neither mainstream nor marxian models of development have room for women.

Both groups fail to address the problem of patriarchy, she said. "Society's acceptance of male domination has pervaded development work."

The plight of women in development reflects the preclusive thinking about traditional social attitudes and religious practices, Anand said.

These types of attitudes and behavior cannot be ignored in the context of development.

"True development, just development cannot happen when the needs, talents, and potentialities of half the world's population are seen as secondary and marginal," Anand said.

A solution to the problem may be found in education, Anand said, if people can learn to understand the social, political and economic systems that govern their lives.

"Education for literacy alone," said Anand has little meaning when "women are relatively powerless and have little control over what is happening in their environment."

Ideally, Anand said, "development must mean the production, distribution and consumption of goods and services, in the most equitable manner, with the maximum participation of all people.

According to Anand this type of development can be realized through "more study, more futuring, more consciousness-raising."

There must also be dialogue between developed and developing nations with regard to "relevant issues of peoples and societies, what they really want, and how they get it.," Anand said.

At Menu Services the cards are re-read, tallied and answered.Menu Services contacts about 20 students a week over the telephone to discuss their comments. Remaining comments are answered on the monthly comment card bulletin boards in each dining common.

During the 1982 spring semester, 1075 comment cards were filed, Keeley said. Twenty eight percent of those comments were negative, while 24 percent were positive. Thirty four percent were requests for specific items or services.

A new part of the comment card program is the use of special cards which ask students to evaluate new dishes in three areas: taste, texture and appearance. The card, given to all students choosing any particular new dish by the server, also asks students whether they would like the item to be served on a regular basis.

Monday's rally was tragically buried in political rhetoric

To the Editor

Monday's rally in response to the tragedy in Beirut was a poor memorial to those Palestinian victims who were slain over the weekend. I arrived hoping by presence to denounce inexcusable murder — only to see the classic Middle Eastern political debate in its UMass incarnation. Those with pro-Israeli sentiments came with signs whose subject ("Israel ABHORS the massacre...") focused on Israel, not criminal slayings. The rally organizers chose the same — and to me ironic — tone: They carried such signs as "Long live the PLO" and pushed some of the pro-Israel demonstrators out of their way.

With each tragedy in the Middle East comes a slew of accusations, yet no recognition of or response to the horrors the accusing side, Israeli or Arab, has helped perpetrate other times. When will we hear the cries against the crimes committed by their own? The corpses on the cover of TIME magazine were people — people savagely killed — despite their ethnic group.

I left the rally almost as it began, sad to see a continuation of the blind and hateful bickering that has spawned many an inexcusable killing in the Middle East. I am so very sad for the victims of the awful slayings, whose lives were so tragically forgotten at Monday's noon rally.

Despite victories, pro-choice activists still have to fight

To the Editor

Wednesday, September 15, 1982, the Senate dealt a major blow to the "New Right" by disposing of two pieces of anti-abortion legislation. This was a significant victory for pro-choice activists, who have been struggling to keep abortion a women's choice. For two weeks pro-choice senators filibustered, (took over the floor), so that no anti-choice senators could debate or propose a vote on this legislation.

The Senate voted 47-46 to table a measure sponsored by Senator Helms (R-,N.C.) that declared the Supreme Court was wrong in legalizing abortion in 1973.

Before this, Senator Orin Hatch (R—Utah) announced he was withdrawing his proposed constitutional amendment banning abortions. These were tabled and withdrawn because of lack of support in the senate.

Although these seem like significant victories, the pro-choice forces have been fighting for many years, especially hard since the passage of the Hyde Amendment six years ago, which restricted Federal funding for abortion. In the past six years there have been five pieces of legislation brought before senate committees which tried to restrict abortions — in one way or another.

These pieces of legislation violate a fundamental part of a woman's freedom; the right to control one's own body.

Pro-choice activists must continue the fight for abortion rights. The attacks are by no means over. Senator Baker, the majority leader, has promised that the issue will be taken up again at the beginning of next year. We must not let 20 per cent of the people dicatate what 80 percent of the people really want: pro-choice! We must all come together and fight so that these victories will continue, and we will defeat anti-choice legislation.

To that certain someone who stole my backpack.

I bet it felt good to saunter out of the Textbook Annex with my pack over your shoulder. You fooled everyone; the lady that was supposed to watch the bags and me.

When I saw it was gone, I innocently thought someone took it by mistake, looked outside and didn't see anyone coming back with it. Then I realized you had it. I looked around again ready to go after you, but you were gone. I went back and filled out a form for stolen property for the files. After that I drifted around campus. I couldn't go to the library because you have my I.D., so I just walked around in the rain without my umbrella which was also in my pack. I was going to study but you have my books. I even skipped music because I was so upset.

Thinking you might have brought it back, I checked the Annex but I guess not. You made me very angry today. Upon arriving home my parents yelled at me for leaving my pack out. They said it was an expensive lesson.

You probably already went through my purse. See those pictures in the plastic? Those are pictures of my friends from highschool — one of them was killed over the summer. You didn't realize that those are the only pictures I have of her when you took my pack. I'm trying to remember what she wrote on the back, but I can't remember. She was a nice girl, you would have liked her.

My calendar is also in your possession. I forgot many of the things I did in my senior year and sometimes like to flip through it and reflect about that year. (I suppose you like to also)

Hey, how about my student I.D. and license? Pretty gruesome, huh? About the only good thing about my stolen pack is being able to have them taken over again.

I'm sorry I missed you at the Annex today. Maybe we'll meet someday, maybe even become good friends. Please bring my backpack to the information booth at the Campus Center or somewhere. I know how hard the economy is these days and stealing looked easy enough. But I have to live too and can't afford to buy everything over again. Bring it back. O.K.? At least for the pictures.

See you around campus.

Indirect support of Apartheid

Business is booming in Sun City! This new city has become a diplomatic coup for the pariah state of South Africa. Greedy artists and athletes of all hues have been lured into this apartheid entrapment. Jimmy Cliff, whose case is to be discussed later below, is one of the latest to join the infamous galaxy of stars to visit this hoax city of "integration" in racist South Africa.

1982 has been designated the International Year for the Mobilization of Sanctions Against apartheid South Africa. This declaration is a culmination of several years of condemnatory resolutions citing South Africa's violation of the United Nations Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid. All these violations, and many others, led to the determination that apartheid is a "crime against humanity." The call for sanctions extends beyond the economic and military spheres to encompass educational and cultural activities as well. Furthermore, on July 4-9, 1982, a cultural conference of South African artists, held in Botswana, confirmed the need for the cultural isolation of South Africa. The conference appealed especially to black artists, who have become the principal object of South Africa's campaign, to join the international community in isolating the racist South African regime.

Having been excluded from many international organizations and activities because of its obnoxious exploitative racial policies, South Africa has embarked on a major campaign to woo artists and athletes to perform in South Africa by offering record-breaking fees. For example, when Stephanie Mills was asked why she decided to perform in racist South Africa, she replied rather pathetically: "I was offered a deal I couldn't refuse." Asked the same question Millie Jackson retorted with no less shame: "All I want is nothing but dollars." Commenting on Millie's remark, Zakes Mofokeng, secretary of a group of entertainers in South Africa, said "I once admired Millie Jackson...but now she has been shrunk to the size of apartheid...and that goes for all the artists who come here to enhance the system of apartheid."

Sun City, in the so-called independent Bophuthatswana, has become an extraordinarily spectacular international Las Vegas with such corruptive inducements as to seduce many artists into becoming bedfellows with apartheid. They invariably are required to perform before segregated audiences in so-called "white South Africa" and integrated audiences in the "homelands". Their complicity in the first instance requires no further comment. In the second instance their naivete is staggering as the Bantustans are creations of the apartheid system. So the "integration" is just a ploy and a charade aimed at legitimizing these puppet states.

The list of artists who have collaborated with racism in South Africa is long but here are a few names: Ray Charles, The O'Jays, The Temptations, The Staple Singers, Brooke Benton, Neil Sedaka, Frank Sinatra, Cher, Simon and Garfunkle, Tavares, Don MacLean, Kenny Rogers, and Susan Anton. Some, however, such as Diana Ross, John McEnroe, Roberta Flack, George Weine, Muhammad Ali and Larry Holmes have either rejected or pledged to reject invitations to South Africa.

But Jimmy Cliff, the reggae star who rose to fame because of his biting social commentary and protest songs against injustice went to South Africa despite the counsel of opponents of apartheid. His defiance of the pleas and lack of concern for the heroic struggles of oppressed South Africans has exposed the hollowness and gimmickry of Jimmy Cliff. Clearly, he is using the reggae idiom for commercial purposes. His lack of identification and solidarity with oppressed people who are the content of his music should be met with a withdrawal of support from his concert performances. This should also extend to a boycott of his albums. For diehard fans who would die from taking such action, let us assure you that it is a temporary measure that will desist as soon as he supports, tangibly, the campaign to end South Africa's discrimination and exploitation of the overwhelming majority of its citizens. No one should be permitted to profit from the slavery of black people in South Africa or the bolstering of the illegitimate apartheid regime.

Express your indignation by boycotting his performance on Thursday night, by communicating your displeasure to him, or by refraining from purchasing any of his albums.

Mokobung Nkomo is a UMass graduate student.

The son also rises

The performance of the Duke Ellington Orchestra Monday night at the Fine Arts Center showcased some of the finest in traditional jazz music by a band which has gained world-wide recognition. It also filled a gap in my sometimes backward knowledge of Afro-American music.

Under the direction of Mercer Ellington, whose involvement with the Ellington Orchestra started at the age of eight, the smooth classy sound of big band jazz alternately excited and mellowed a small but highly appreciative FAC crowd.

Mercer Ellington swooped and glided like some portly yet graceful swan, conducting the orchestra with his whole body in a kind of waltz-like dance. He always portrayed a classiness the Ellington Orchestra is famous for.

Starting off with Ellington classics like "Take the A Train," Mercer guided the orchestra through the multitude of different styles explored by Duke and his contemporaries.

"Sweet Georgia Brown" was built on a rock steady yet uncomplicated bass line, allowing each member of the horn section opportunities to step up and add their own melodic interpretations. As horn members played in unison, coinciding and then pairing off, the rich harmonic flavor of the big band contrasted sharply with other more conceptual jazz musics which make irequent use of discord and other unharmonic sounds.

"Mood Indigo" began with a soft delicate piano, sounding almost classical, then went slowly into a bluesish waltz which featured a voice-like muted trombone.

The Ellington Orchestra put the "pedal to the metal" on several all-out blues tunes which allowed for some call and response action between band trombone players. It was interesting that the trombone, an instrument which has grown relatively scarce since the big band era, could provide such personal and sensitive expression.

Tenor Saxophoneist David Young took the front on "C Jam Blues," which seemed to lose none of its down-to-earth expression when played by the tuxedoed Ellington band.

Vocalist Anita Moore strutted on stage three-quarters through and wasted no time in stealing the show with her soaring voice and jovial personality. She put everyone at ease.

Ms. Moore led the band through "It Don't Mean A Thing If It Ain't Got That Swing," "I Get Misty," and "Hellow Young Lovers," always rising to the intensity of the Ellington Orchestra with a combination of "scat" vocalization and sheer athletic vocal power.

In the development of Afro-American music the thousands of melodies composed by Duke Ellington represent the heritage of blues, Dixieland and Ragtime and the springboard from which modern jazz grew. Though the literally thousands of Ellington compositions live on — borrowed by countless modern artists — the original big band power and class of the Ellington orchestra is still something to witness.

Mercer Ellington, conductor of the Duke Ellington Orchestra.

Theatre on a Budget

BY PAM MADNICK
Collegian Staff

"If the show flops, financially, we might not be able to do another one. There's a sort of survival attitude among everyone involved," said Larry Cox of the University of Massachusetts Music Theatre Guild, in reference to this semester's production of Seesaw.

As students there's a special energy, according to Cox. No one tells them they have to do it this way or that way. They make the rules. Unfortunately, people still erroneously consider the Guild to be an offspring of the Theatre Department.

If a student acts or works behind the scenes of a show, he or she is entitled to a one year membership which allows the student to vote on future productions, board members and have a say in other important Guild decisions.

The Guild was founded 48 years ago, when the Men's Glee Club, the Women's Chorale, and the University orchestra merged and called themselves the Operetta Guild from 1936-1970. The Guild was known for its elaborate Gilbert and Sullivan productions. Success peaked in the fifties when the Music Theatre began producing Broadway shows including collegiate premieres of Oklahoma, South Pacific, and Carousel.

In the Sixties and Seventies, the Guild was, for the most part, financed by the UMass Arts Council, as a Recognized Student Organization (RSO). Since 1975, because of the success of the Pirates of Penzance, Jesus Christ Superstar, Sugar, Pippin, and most recently, Godspell, the Music Theatre Guild is holding its own. Today, the organization is self-supported through revenues.

Last semester, the Music Theatre Guild performed an outdoor production of Godspell in Southwest. The free show drew in hundreds. "Our revenue from ticket sales has allowed us to do things like that," said Cox.

"It was one of the best things we've ever done, one of the best activities on campus in the past five years. It got people to the theatre. Generally, they (residents of Southwest and other areas of UMass) wouldn't go to the theatre, so we brought it to them."

The Music Theatre Guild encourages students interested in acting, music, public relations, and business to contact them. They do stress that not all members are Theatre majors.

Because the group is not affiliated with a department, it has to rent Bowker Auditorium for its shows twice a year. With no permanent home, the Guild rehearses in the Campus Center or wherever there is a room available.

The Guild has begun casting and will begin rehearsing the show Seesaw soon, for a production in November. Current president Bill Colura will direct the show.

Popular Doonesbury comic to disappear Trudeau says he will return in 1984

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

The popular cartoon "Doonesbury," which has been a mainstay of the comics page in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian for the past seven years, will disappear from the paper at the end of this semester.

Doonesbury creator, Gary Trudeau, is taking time out to contemplate the future of his characters.

Garry B. Trudeau, the artist who created "Doonesbury" while a student at Yale University, announced recently that he will take a leave of absence from producing the comic strip. Trudeau is expected to stop publication of the comic on Jan. 2, 1983 and will resume no later than the fall of 1984, according to Universal Press Syndicate, the distributors of "Doonesbury" to more than 700 newspapers.

"I need a breather. Investigative cartooning is a young man's game," Trudeau, 34, said recently. "This is simply a lull in the action. It is not, repeat not, a mid-life crisis."

Trudeau said he intends to take the time off not only to give himself a break, but reappraise his characters and decide where to take them next.

"There are a few problems that need to be ironed out. For almost 15 years, the main characters have been trapped in a time warp and so find themselves carrying the colors and scars of two separate generations. It was unfair to stretch their formative years to embrace both Vietnam and preppy," Trudeau said.

"My characters are understandably confused and out of sorts," he said. "It's time to give them some $20 haircuts, graduate them and move them out into the larger world of grown-up concerns. The trip from draft beer and mixers to cocaine and herpes is a long one and it's time they got a start on it."

Throughout his career, Trudeau, a generally very private man, has refused to grant interviews. He said he will continue that policy and would not elaborate on his reasons for the leave of absence.

Throughout his career, Trudeau has received numerous public attention and accolades. In 1975, he was awarded the Pulitzer Prize, the only comic strip ever to win the coveted journalism award.

Trudeau has also received an academy award nomination for his co-direction of the animated film, "A Doonesbury Special" which also received the Special Jury Prize at the Cannes Film Festival. He has also been the subject of a TIME magazine cover story and received honorary degrees from several schools, including Williams College, Colgate, Colby, Penn, Yale and William and Mary.

While Trudeau, who is married to television news reporter Jane Pauley, keeps away from interviews and closely guards his private life, he rebuffs a common rumor that he is the only person, besides Pope John Paul II to have avoided an interview on the CBS television show "60 Minutes."

"I don't think too much should be made of that," Trudeau said recently. "With the Pope, there was a scheduling conflict. They tried to book him on Easter, which is pretty arrogant if you think about it. In my case, I missed the message on my answering service. Unless you've been defrauding widows out of their life savings, "60 Minutes" doesn't call twice."

Since "Doonesbury" first appeared in 28 papers in October, 1970, the strip has been the subject of controversy. In the fall of 1980, for example, Trudeau's week-long tour of Ronald Reagan's brain was met with disdain by many people and led to several papers suspending the strip or temporarily moving it to the editorial pages.

"It's my job," Trudeau said. "I'm a form of social control. I make no apologies."

Gravity Affects Your Body

If you had been a member of the crew on the 84-day Skylab space mission, you would have had a first-hand experience on how the body reacts in a gravity-free world. And if you thought you body had stopped "growing," you might be in for a surprise. All of the astronauts while on that mission grew taller, some of them almost two inches taller. Why? Without the pull of gravity, the body loosens up. The distance between each disc in the spinal column expands slightly.

Here on Earth, we all know how important the force of gravity is in keeping our feet on the ground. In fact, the whole body is affected by this force. If your spine is in proper alignment, this is one sign of good health. But if it isn't, then you may be suffering unnecessarily from back pain and other discomforts. If that's the case, you may want to consider an examination to find out how you can get relief.

THE UMASS CREW TEAM HITS THE WATER

The UMass crew team practices every day on the Connecticut River in Hadley.

Men's tennis team opens home season

BY SCOTT HOOD
Collegian Correspondent

With a pair of razor-close 5-4 decisions (a loss to Rhode Island and a victory over Vermont) in the books, the University of Massachusetts men's tennis team commences its fall 1982 home schedule with a match against the University of New Hampshire this afternoon at 2:30 PM on the Boyden Courts.

Bob Szlosek, the second year Minutemen coach, expressed optimism and strong expectations for the remainder of the campaign.

"We have a good, tough fall schedule and I definitely look for improvement over last year. All the players had excellent tennis summers, so everybody reported in good shape," said Szlosek.

The primary reason for Szlosek's optimism is senior Neal Mackertich, the New England Men's Class A champion the last two years who is in his third consecutive year as the Minutemen's #1 singles player.

"Neal's strengths are his consistency, fast hands at the net, deceptive quickness and experience," says Szlosek. "Neal is also a more mature and nastier player this year."

Mackertich, considered one of the top players in the East, is expected to take a shot at the pro circuit when his education is completed.

"We've beaten Vermont and played Rhode Island tough. Both of them are considered two of the top teams in New England. We should be in the top five in New England by the end of the year," said Mackertich.

Challenging Mackertich for the top position is junior Steve Jordan, who played an extensive summer tourney schedule, winning several big matches along the way.

Other key performers for the netmen include Nick Julian and Rich Lindgren. Last spring, when Mackertich was sidelined with an injury, Julian played at #1 singles and gained valuable experience. Julian, a junior, is described by Szlosek as a steady player with a big forehand. Lindgren, who's a sophomore, is quick, aggressive, and a hard hitter.

This year's prize recruit is freshman Stuart Goodman, who hails from Pittsburgh, PA. He has extensive National Junior Level experience and played many Middle State tourneys. Goodman is expected to make a run at the top players, and is given a good chance to crack the top three by the end of the campaign.

"I'm playing kids a lot older. They serve and volley and are very aggressive. I don't have any more easy matches," said Goodman.

After today's match, UMass will enjoy a week off before clashing with Connecticut and Westfield State, both at home, next week on Wednesday and Thursday.

Women booters blank Westfield, 9-0

UM offense keeps ball all game long

By PETER SODERBERG
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's soccer team put on an offensive clinic yesterday at Boyden Field in its 9-0 rout over Westfield State.

The Minutewomen put the pressure on early and kept the ball in Westfield's zone for almost the entire game. Freshman Susan Bird put the first point on the board on a pass from Debbie Pickett 6:30 into the game.

It was a fine day for the potent UMass freshman scoring attack. The next five goals were scored by freshman. Debbie Harackiewicz scored the next two tallies on a 35 foot blast into the top right corner of the Westfield goal and a nice turnaround chip that caught the Westfield goalie by surprise.

Christine Taggart put UMass up by four late in the first half to finish up a neat passing exchange with Sharon Daggett and Natalie Prosser who got the assists.

The score at the half was 4-0.

Toggard and Bird put the game out of reach in the second half with goals at 15:10 and 16:19 respectively. From there, the Westfield goalie was so shell shocked that she let a shot go through her hands for a goal by sophomore Lori Stukes.

At 26:58 Paula Stashis upped the score to 8-0 on what was the prettiest of the game. Debbie Harackiewicz set Stashis up on a corner kick that she banked off the side of her head.

Junior Toni Giuliano added the final blow of the afternoon on her goal 34:45 into the secon d half. Ellen Taggart picked up the assist by feeding Giuliano in close to the net.

Though UMass exhibited a potent offensive attack, coach Kalekena Banda saw room for improvement. Banda is looking for improvement on the teams hustle.

"We will have to be more aggressive and run more against B.C. and George Washington this weekend," said Banda, "Today was a good win but we will have to be hungrier against better teams."

Westfield coach Mike Walker cited several injuries to key offensive players that hampered his team's efforts. He was quick to note however that "it would have taken alot more than we had to beat UMass today."

UMass will play host to Boston College this Saturday at 2:00 p.m. Banda and his team of flying freshman, who have socored nine of the team's 12 goals this season, will have their hands full against a B.C. team which is supposed to be very strong this season.

Field hockey team downs Boston College 3-1

By JILL LANG
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts field hockey team practiced in Boyden Gym Monday night in preparation for the smooth fast turf that they would be playing on at Boston College when they faced the Eagles at Alumni Stadium.

Last night, that preparation paid off as the Minutewomen recorded their second win of the season by downing Boston College 3-1.

"I like the turf better," said coach Pam Hixon on Monday. "We should play well on a surface like this."

Coach Hixon was right, but the Minutewomen took a while to adjust to the turf. even with the indoor practice.

The first half was a see-saw battle which saw UMass outshoot B.C. 13-5. It was the B.C. offense, however, that made its shots count, when they hit the board at 29.40.

B.C. was awarded a penalty corner and capitalized the opportunity. After the corner was taken, a brief scuffle in front of the goal ensued, and the ball was tipped past UMass goalie Patty Shea.

Throughout the remainder of the half, there were many offense exchanges, but neither team could find the groove.

Action was tight coming into the second half, with both teams searching for momentum.

Once the Minutewomen got the ball rolling on the turn in the second half, they never let it stop, as they outshot B.C. 20-0.

When Alison Rioux found the net at 23:00, UMass turned the game to its favor and never looked back. On a corner play, Rioux flicked the ball into the back of the net.

Forward Pam Moryl broke the game open by scoring what would be the winning goal, at 13:35. Moryl took a breakaway pass from Megan Donnelly and put it through a hole in the B.C. defense.

Moryl found the net again, this time at 2:13, turning a deflection from a B.C. stick into all UMass needed to insure the victory.

The Minutewomen will play their next two games on the road before playing at home against Springfield College on October 2. The next game is Saturday against the University of Vermont.

Volleyball team sweeps ULowell to open season

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Fresh off a fantastic third place finish in last weekend's UMass Invitational, the University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team kept on rolling en route to a 15-4, 15-10, 15-4 sweep over the University of Lowell last night in NOPE gym.

UMass, spearheaded by the powerful spiking of Patti Philbin, totally dominated the evening. Patricia Grant also played a big part in the UM romp setting up Philbin's and Kirsten Smith's many spikes.

The Minutewomen took command from the start and ran up a 9-0 lead in the first game, before Lowell managed a point. ULowell couldn't handle the UM serves, while UMass set up the ball and spiked it the few times that Lowell returned it to them.

After winning the first game easily, the Minutewomen ran into some trouble in the second game. Lowell, led by spiker Cheryl Lauziere, took a quick 6-3 lead. UMass battled back to take a 10-6 lead, but had their problems. The UM servers were sending the ball out of bounds and many of their spikes were long too.

However, UM regained control and went on to take the second game.

In the third, Lowell took a quick 3-0 lead and then Massachusetts scored 15 of the next 16 points to win the game and sweep the best-of-five match, 3-0.

Coach Elaine Sortino was pleased with the win, which started her team's season record at 1-0.

"I was really happy with the team's play. We totally dominated the match and that's the way it should be," said Sortino.

Sortino also had to be pleased with the fact that four of her six starting players are freshmen and they all played very well. It was the teamwork of Grant, Smith, Philbin, Sally Maher, Ann Ringrose and Susan Mudry that elevated UMass above Lowell.

The spikers hit the road for their next encounter, a 12 team tournament at Central Conneticut on Saturday. UMass' next home match is against the ever-tough Boston College and MIT, next Wednesday, the 29th, at 6:30 in NOPE.

Kathleen Kennedy Townsend, niece of Senator Edward Kennedy, addressed members of the Student Senate last night urging student participation in the upcoming nuclear freeze rally.

Senate endorses rally at first meeting of fall

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate voted last night to endorse a Nuclear Freeze Rally and to approve a controversial personnel policy, in their first meeting this semester.

Making a presentation on the Nuclear Freeze Rally was Kathleen Kennedy Townsend, daughter of the late Robert Kennedy. The rally is to be held in the Student Union Ballroom at the University of Massachusetts on October 5.

"On October 5, (Sen. Edward) Kennedy will be there, James Taylor will be there, Peter Yarrow of "Peter, Paul & Mary" will be there, so will Lauren Bacall," said Townsend. "I hope that each and every one of you will come and bring others."

In asking for the Senate's endorsement of the rally, Townsend said, "I hope you're a more enlightened Senate than the one in Washington."

"What the people in Washington listen to are votes," said Townsend.

The rally will coincide with the last day Massachusetts voters will be able to register to vote in the November 2 election.

In supporting the concept of a "mutually verifiable freeze," Townsend questioned the value of nuclear weapons in defense.

"The strength of America doesn't come from nuclear defense," she said. "It doesn't defend our country and it doesn't make us strong."

In closing, Townsend quoted her Uncle, the late President John F. Kennedy, in saying, "We have the possibility to make this the best generation, or the last."

The Undergraduate Student Senate unanimously endorsed the rally.

In other business, the Senate approved a personnel policy developed over the summer, but Director of Student Activities Randy Donant charged that the policy was in violation of University policy.

"When you're hiring non-student personnel, students are not allowed to do the final hiring," said Donant. "A state employee must do the hiring."

SGA officers responded by saying this was Donant's view and was a point of conflict which has existed for many years. Senate Speaker Sharon Davies said the matter had been discussed with legal counsel and was proper.

Donant challenged only the policies pertaining to non-student employees.

"University policy, as I understand it, says that students cannot hire University officials," said Donant. "That's not saying they don't have a role in it, only that they are not the final authority."

Death penalty to be debated at Student Union

By VICKIE BATES
Collegian Correspondent

Massachusetts legislators, educators, lawyers and police will take a stand for or against restoration of the death penalty in the state, tonight in the Student Union Ballroom at the University of Massachusetts.

Rep. Jim Collins, D-Amherst, William Bowers, director of the Center for Applied Social Research at Northeastern University and Anne Greenblatt, lawyer for the Massachusetts Correctional Legal Services will speak against restoration of the death penalty in Massachusetts after 35 years without an execution.

The death penalty speakers are Dennis Curran, deputy legal counsel to Governor Edward King, Donald Maia, chief of the Amherst Police Department, and Rep. Marie Parente, D-Milford.

Restoration of the death penalty is Question 2 on November's ballot and, if passed, would allow the Massachusetts legislature to propose an amendment on the death penalty to the state constitution.

Almost half of the students interviewed by the Collegian said they were not clear on the issue of restoration and said they would have to give it more thought before they vote in November.

"I feel uncertain about it, I'm going to do more thinking about it," said Ruth Rosenblatt, 20, a psychology major living in Brett dormitory.

"It's inevitable that you have to consider finances in the state system and how much money they're going to put into programs," Rosenblatt said, "but, I'm not going to say it's cheaper to kill them."

Art major Ted VanLiew, 24, of Wheeler dormitory, said he is "hesitant to commit myself too."

"It does seem too easy to get off with criminal acts or the punishment is not very severe and is not that much of a deterrent," VanLiew said.

"It could stop crime," said Butterfield resident Elaina Quinn. But, Quinn said, "prisoners should be able to be rehabilitated. Maybe it should be optional."

The death penalty would be appropriate "for the really grotesque crimes," said Paul Gorter, a business major from Brown dormitory.

"You can't just put these people in jail and support them for life," he said, "they're not going to be an asset to society anyway."

Erica Liss, 19, of the College of Arts and Sciences (CASIAC) living in Grayson, disagrees: "You're trying to fix the problem after it's happened."

The death penalty is "not really preventative," Liss said.

Steve Salloway, 18, a CASIAC major from McNamara dorm, says Massachusetts should restore the death penalty, but only "under very strict guidelines. The worst thing that could happen was that you could kill an innocent man," he said.

"I'm sure something better can be found," said communication studies major Eileen Seaberg, 20, of Brandywine Apartments in Amherst.

I don't think, especially at a state level, that anyone has the right to decide that," Seaberg said.

The debate will be broadcast live on WMUA 91.1 FM.

UMass student denies theft Fitzwilly's may countersue

By AMY JENNESS
Collegian Staff

Miriam Domonique, 24, a University of Massachusetts student who filed a sexual harassment suit against Fitzwilly's restaurant in Northampton, last week was following company policy when she took a hat left by a customer, said Domonique's lawyer.

Ruth Diaz from the UMass Legal Services Office, who is representing Domonique said, "Miss Domonique was acting in the normal Fitzwilly's policy in claiming an article left behind. There was no mention of lost and found property in the Fitzwilly's handbook."

Walter Hayes, partner in the law firm Sullivan & Hayes of Springfield which is representing the defendants, said, "No handbook can say everything. I think there is something in the book about dishonesty."

Diaz said Dominique filed a sexual harassment suit against the restaurant with the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination around March 18, 1982. Shortly after filing, Domonique took a vacation from her job as waitress at Fitzwilly's. When she returned to work, she was told she was fired for stealing a hat.

At a recent press conference, Attorney Patrick Egan, of Sullivan & Hayes, said in behalf of the defendants, "We categorically deny the groundless and irresponsible allegations in the complaint. The young lady involved in the suit was dismissed with just cause."

Diaz said Domonique was subject to a hostile working environment and received reprimands for petty occurrances when she refused to comply with propositions made by her employer, manager Richard Burbine.

Domonique is filing the suit under Title VII of the Massachusetts State discriminations statutes which Diaz said ensures employees an environment free of harassment.

The three defendants in the suit are Joshua, Inc., the corporation which owns Fitzwilly's, Roger Kirwood, who identifies himself as the owner of the Northampton Fitzwilly's, and Richard Burbine, the restaurant manager at the time of Domonique's employment.

The defendants are considering countersuing Domonique with slander, said Egan. Hayes yesterday said the defendants have been served with the suit, but have not decided what particular action they are going to take at this time.

Union railroad strike ended by Reagan

BOSTON (AP) — Freight service resumed after midnight and commuter service prepared to roll on schedule this morning on the Boston & Maine Railroad following President Reagan's signing of emergency legislation ending a four-day nationwide rail strike.

The orders to resume service came early last night, according to Dennis Coffey, B&M assistant to the vice president for labor relations and personnel, after the company was informed by Dick Duwart, general chairman for the local of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, that the union "agreed to the return-to-work agreement."

Coffey said pickets, which had been thrown up throughout the system, were taken down last night. He said the commuter service would be on its regular weekday schedule, with the first train leaving Rockport at 5:20 a.m.

By administration estimates, the four-day walkout put nearly a half million people out of work. And Reagan declared that if the strike were to continue, it could cost the economy "close to $1 billion a day."

The president's signature came just hours after the House passed the measure 383-17.

The Senate had approved the measure by voice vote Tuesday night. It imposes a contract settlement on the locomotive engineers' union and the rail industry, thus enabling the walkout.

The strike began midnight Saturday over a contract dispute and involves 219 local engineers, who belong to the 26,000-member union. Coffey said about 2,300 brotherlocal B* M workers were affected by the strike, many of whom honored picket lines. B&M employs about 3,000, he said.

Israeli Parliament votes down inquiry

JERUSALEM (AP) — Menachem Begin's government narrowly headed off a challenge to its power yesterday as the repercussions of the Beirut massacre shook Israel.

U.S. Marines and French Paratroopers were sailing back to the Lebanese capital, meanwhile, to try to prevent new bloodshed.

Crews bulldozing through the ruins of the Sabra and Chatilla Palestinian refugee camps in Beirut recovered more bodies yesterday, bringing to 293 the total confirmed killed in last week's slaughter of civilians by Lebanese Christian militiamen.

"That doesn't include those who were thrown into holes made by explosives," Red Cross spokesmanJean-JacquesKurtz said. "There are certainly many more."

Estimates of the final toll in the predominantly Moslem camps range from 300, by the U.S. government, to 1,400, by the Palestinian Liberation Organization.

Israel's invasion armyhad the two west Beirut camps surrounded while the massacre was under way late last week. Arab governments and others hold Israel responsible for the bloodletting, and many Israelis have called for an immediate independent investigation of the circumstances, a call rejected by Prime Minister Begin.

After a stormy session of the Israeli Parliament yesterday Begin's Likud Coalition defeated by a 48-42 vote a motion calling for such an inquiry.

"Mr. Prime Minister, Mr. Defense Minister, whose stupid idea was it to send the Phalangists (Christian militiamen) into the camps?" Shimon Peres, leader of the opposition Labor Party, asked in an impassioned speech.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — A state police detective, testifying in the murder and arson trial of a building manager, said yesterday that a fire in a Holyoke tenement that killed seven people was "started by an accelerant being ignited in a first-floor hallway."

Detective Lieutenant John J. Mace of the state fire marshall's office examined the four-story brick building and said charring marks on the first floor showed that a flammable liquid had been poured on the floor and ignited. The flames then shot up the staircase and through the roof, he said.

State Police chemist Francis Hankard testified that he found no trace of the substance when he tested the flooring but said it could have been burned off by fire. A 5-gallon can found by the stairs held only dirty water, he said.

Ohio physician arrested, charged with 36 rapes

An "outstanding physician" who was caught in two women's apartment with surgical gloves and a ski mask was charged yesterday with breaking in and raping dozens of women in their homes.

Dr. Edward Franklin Jackson Jr., a 38-year old internist who has served on a hospital board, was indicted by a Franklin County grand jury on 36 counts of rape and 46 counts of aggravated burglary. The crimes took place over a period of seven years.

Nuclear freeze question makes Nov. state ballot

BOSTON (AP) — After months of delay, the Legislature moved yesterday to put a question on the November election ballot testing public sentiment on halting the nuclear arms race.

A House-Senate conference committee approved a question nearly identical to that approved by Wisconsin voters by a 3-to-1 margin last week. The language does not refer to a nuclear weapons "freeze," which is what the original Massachusetts proposal sought and which generated opposition in the House.

The nationwide campaign for an immediate freeze on nuclear arms by both superpowers has emerged as one of the key political issues of the year.

Legislators predicted quick passage of the referendum bill by the full House and Senate Thursday. There is a 5 p.m. Thursday deadline for getting questions on the ballot, according to state Secretary Michael J. Connolly.

"It is clear there will be language on the ballot," Sen. George Bachrach, D-Watertown, said yesterday after House Speaker Thomas W. McGee named three representatives to the conference committee created to iron out differences in separate bills that had passed in each chamber. Bachrach is chairman of the Senate conferees.

"I don't see any problem at all; it's routine from here on in," said Rep. Joseph DeNucci, D-Newton, chairman of the House conferees.

Anti-semitic slurs discovered upon posters

By SCOTT HERSEY
Collegian Staff

Two posters, part of a number put up by the University of Massachusetts Alliance for Israel, were found yesterday marked with assorted anti-semitic slurs and swastikas at two different locations on campus.

The posters — which had been put up at different locations around campus in order to advertise for the alliance's weekly meeting — were found to be vandalized yesterday morning by two different students, one in Washington Tower in the Southwest Residential Area and one in the Student Union.

Dennis Fischmann, a UMass graduate student who discovered the poster hanging in the Student Union, said the act "is typical of simplistic reactions" to the recent Beirut massacre.

"It makes it much harder for people who want to offer criticism of Israel which is friendly and from within and to distinguish oneself from those who are offering" extreme criticism or praise for Israel, he said.

A member of the student organization Hillel who found the other poster in Washington Tower, wanting to remain anonymous because she is afraid, said while the incident is "scary" in light of the rise of anti-semitism, it reflects the ignorance surrounding the issue.

No other posters were found vandalized, Deborah Propper, the regional coordinator for the American Zionist Youth Foundation, said yesterday.

"This stuff is not really uncommon," Propper said. "It happens quite often. There is no mention of Hitler or Jews anywhere on the poster."

"Student Alliance for Israel doesn't even necessarily mean Jewish," Propper said.

Judith Davis, coordinator of the UMass Office of Human Relations said the vandalism was a "deplorable act on the part of some individuals."

Off-campus students supported by the Commuter Collective

By TOM SEXTON
Collegian Correspondent

The name Commuter Collective may sound vague, but it is appropriate for a student organization that initiates events ranging from a rent control fight to a trip to the circus.

The Commuter Collective, said student staff assistant Barbara Brodley, is a student run area government which is funded by 7,000 off-campus students through their activities fees.

She said the Commuter Collective sponsors the Off-Campus Housing Office (OCHO) which provides the most up-to-date listing of available housing in the area in addition to student tenant counseling and advocacy. Bradley said the Commuter Collective also funds the University Child Care Office, the Classic/Progressive Film Series and various concerts.

Of central concern to commuting students is the rent control issue. The Commuter Collective, in conjunction with OCHO is organizing a campaign for the passing of a rent control bill.

OCHO Coordinator Joanne Levinsen said, "We're trying to educate the community through outreach programs on what rent control is and how it will benefit not only students but the community as a whole."

A rent control bill was defeated by 15 votes in Amherst town meeting last May.

This fall's campus elections will include 15 seats for the Commuter Assembly, which determines the overall direction of the Commuter Collective, as well as how it's budget of nearly $60,000 will be sent.

"The elections aren't just a formal process, but are a way of getting involved," said Peter Brown, Commuter Assembly chairperson. All commuters are eligible to run for the Assembly as long as nomination papers are turned in to the Commuter Collective's office by Sept. 16, he said.

Any commuter with a question, problem, complaint, or idea "is more than welcome to come up and talk to us", he said. The office is staffed by one professional and six students and is located in Room 404 in the Student Union building.

Students interested in working with the Commuter Collective or on the rent control issue should drop by the Commuter Collective Office.

Women's Center: a valuable resource

By MARY L. PALAZZO
Collegian Correspondent

University of Massachusetts Women interested in issues concerning women and resources open to them will find the Southwest Women's Center a helpful source of information.

The center, located between Crampton and MacKimmie dormitories in the Southwest Residential Area, has existed for more than ten years. It offers three-credit courses, one-credit colloques and workshops on issues such as women and Reagonomics and violence against women. There is also a library of feminist books and an updated resource referral system, to aid women in finding information or services the center may not have.

The center also offers friendship, said the center's coordinator, Vicki Jacoby. "The service is important. It is a way to make new friendships and is a threshold into some kind of involvement in women's issues," said Jacoby.

Jacoby, who developed and coordinated the Women's Studies Program at Southern Methodist University, said the Southwest Center offers and seeks a diverse group of women. It is a place where women can explore a variety of issues and concerns, she said.

The center is run by Jacoby, two paid staff members and volunteers. "There is a collective involvement between the paid staff and the volunteers," said Jacoby. Volunteers are needed to keep the center open during the planned hours of 9 a.m.-5 p.m., Monday through Friday, she said. Arrangements may also be made to receive credit for volunteer work.

The center is holding an open house on Thursday, September 23 at 4 p.m. Jacoby said she encourages anyone interested in finding out about the center or in volunteering to attend the open house.

Traditional customs help usher in Jewish high holidays

By TIM MacPHEE
Collegian Correspondent

Jewish students throughout the University will celebrate Yom Kippur, the culmination of the Jewish high holidays with services at the Student Union Ballroom on Monday.

Jews around the world have already ushered in the new year, Rosh Hashana, which was Saturday.

Rosh Hashana, literally "the head of the year", is a celebration of renewal. The new Jewish year is 5,743.

"It is festive and important. What we do in the week that follows is atone our sins," said Debbie Propper, 22, who works for Hillel.

Dipping honey in apples to wish everyone a sweet New Year, along with sending greeting cards are traditions of Rosh Hashana. Another custom is blowing an instrument called a shofar, which is made from the horn of an animal.

"The piercing sound it makes is like a moral alarm clock," said Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, staff head of Hillel. It grew from an ancient tradition, and "warns people to take stock of their lives," said Perlmutter.

The Jewish New Year consists of spiritual cleansing which culminates in Yom Kippur.

"On this day, most Jews fast from sundown of the previous day until sunset or later of Monday. We fast because it is a spiritual day of meditating and cleansing," said Perlmutter.

"We fast in recognition of people who have no food to eat and of people who are repressed, among other reasons," he added.

According to legend, a book of life was opened on Rosh Hashana, then signed and sealed on Yom Kippur. Prayer and good deeds during the interim had an affect on the coming year.

The Recognized Student Organization (RSO) serving the Jewish community on campus is Hillel, the name of a teacher in ancient times.

"One thing that people should know is that we're not just a religious organization," said Perlmutter. "We serve the entire campus by sponsoring cultural events, concerts and meetings."

Celebration of Yom Kippur will start Sunday evening with Kol Nidrei, an evening service.

A break in the fast dinner will follow Yom Kippur Monday night. Interested students can sign up for it in the Hillel office, 302 Student Union.

Everywoman's Center schedules new workshops and support groups

The Working Women's Task Force is offering three support groups: a career/life planning group, a working women's support group and an unemployed women's support group. The groups are free and open to all women.

The Everywoman's Center Counseling Program is offering two support groups. One support group is for women with eating problems including compulsive eating, bulemia and anorexia. The second group is for mothers in a wide range of situations. Prudence Grand, a counselor with the Counseling Program, will facilitate the groups. Confidentiality is assured.

Two workshops on careers for women are also being offered by the Working Women's Task Force. On Sept. 30, a workshop on resume writing will be held from 12 p.m. to 1:30 p.m. in the Campus Center in rooms 805-809. The second workshop on job interviewing will be held from 12 p.m. to 1:30 p.m. on Oct. 7 in the Campus Center in rooms 905-909. Both workshops will be facilitated by Alice Smith from the UMass placement office.

Two open meetings for Women Organizing for Occupational Safety and Health (WOOSH) will be held for interested women at 4 p.m. on Tuesday, Sept. 28 and at 7 p.m. on Wednesday, Sept. 29 at the Everywoman's Center. Credit may be available for work.

The Third World Women's Task Force is having an open house and pot-luck dinner at the Everywoman's Center 6-8 p.m. Wednesday, Sept. 29. The main dish will be catered by Yvonne John. Childcare will be provided. The open house-dinner is an open invitation to Third World women on campus and in the community to find out about the Everywoman's Center services and the Third World program's services.

For more information about the Everywoman's Center's workshops or support groups, call the center during office hours at 545-0883.

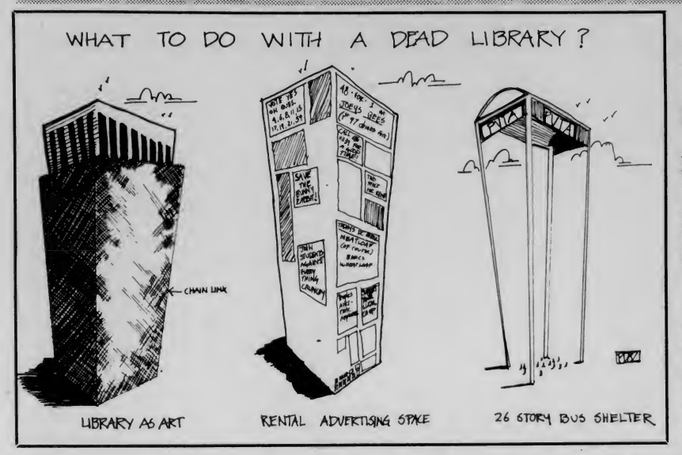
EDITORIAL/OPINION



Does victory end for Duke at 128?

Early last week, while Dukakis and King were making 11th-hour campaign drives, the Springfield TV news programs were busy interviewing local people-in-the-street about the primary. A factory worker, a housewife, a businessman - they all got their 10-second spots on the air.

Most of the people supported King. In fact, considering the substantial margin of victory that Dukakis received statewide, the number of local citizens who said they would vote for King was astonishing. And nearly all these

King supporters said the same thing about Dukakis - that he neglected the western half of the state when he was governor.

The local election results show the broad extent of King support. They also show a simple fact; if the rest of the state had voted the way the western half did, Dukakis would have lost.

Perhaps the most dramatic example of anti-Dukakis sentiment was in Springfield itself. Of 24,500 votes cast, Dukakis lost by over a thousand. That may not seem like much until you remember that Dukakis carried the city by 400 votes in 1978 - the year King won statewide.

In Holyoke, Dukakis' loss went from a mere 20 votes in 1978 to nearly a thousand this year. Same story in Chicopee, where he lost by 900 votes in 1978 and over a thousand this year. Dukakis also met defeat in Westfield, Ludlow, West Springfield, Wilbraham and Agawam. True, the Duke made impressive victories in Pittafield, Greenfield, Northampton and, of course, Amherst. He also did well in rural areas. But the big industrial towns and their suburbs were King territory, a fact which the likely governor-to-be must take careful note of.

Dukakis' poor finish shows a deep distrust for the former governor in these parts, possibly rooted in the idea that he is simply too Boston-oriented. Plenty of voters in the TV news spots said as much. Maybe voters in this region had seen too many films of Dukakis riding the MBTA, visiting high-tech firms on Rt. 128, or lecturing at Harvard to think that he knew or cared about western Massachusetts.

And the fact remains that Dukakis actually fared worse this year than in 1978 in the Valley's three largest cities. These reverses show not just that the Duke is disliked, but that King did something right. What that something was I don't know, and maybe neither does King. But in this part of the state, he apparently benefitted from the perception of Dukakis as out-of-touch with its wishes.

Collegian columnist guilty of media distortion, not PLO

To the Editor:

Dave McCarthy's column "Is U.S. press PLO puppet" (Sept. 21) is riddled with falsehoods, misconceptions, and ironies. In a weak attempt at demonstrating that the American press is a puppet of the PLO, McCarthy bases his argument on false assumptions and fallacious reasoning.

Firstly, the murder of hundreds of civilians (a large number of whom were women and children) is not classified as a massacre because "killing the PLO and the extermination of the Palestinian people" are not "one and the same." What a valiant effort at drawing a distinction where none exists!

McCarthy also denies that the PLO is the representative of the Palestinian people. Perhaps he considers it insignificant that over 100 nations recognize the PLO as the "sole, legitimate representative of the Palestinian people"

One of the more blatant fallacies professed by McCarthy is his claim "Lebanon has always had a Christian majority and a Moslim minority." Reference to any almanac would prove otherwise. McCarthy obviously fails to comprehend the fact that the political and economic subjugation of a substantial Muslim community by Lebanon's Christians is a salient feature of the Lebanese civil war.

McCarthy attempts to hide the culpibility of the Israelis and the Israeli-supported Christian militia and shifts the blame to the victims. The similarities between this and revisionist attempts to discount the war crimes of the Nazis are frightening.

As Anthoney Lewis wrote in the New York Times(Sept. 19), "Mr. Begin and Mr. Sharon always spoke of Palestinians in Lebanon as 'terrorists'. It was a dehumanizing device, a deliberate one: as if there were non Palestinians except bomb throwers. Of all human beings on earth, Menachem Begin should have known that calling people brutal names makes it easier to hate and kill them. The women and children massacred in the refugee camps are one more testament in man's history to the dehumanizing power of hatred."

It is tragic that McCarthy has brushed off the killing of innocent people as a mere media distortion. His reliance on false assumptions reveals the weakness of his argument.

Credibility is crucial to the preservation of free and responsible journalism McCarthy runs considerable risk of losing his credibility of expounding so carelessly on a subject about which he obviously knows nothing. It is ironic that the vehicle for his obfuscation is a column on media distortion.

A new push for Human Rights

The legislation supported by the New Right has suffered a minor setback this year thanks to a liberal filibuster in Congress preventing votes on the abortion and school prayer issues. But the conservative forces are not to be outdone. They will be back in 1983.

The New Right's presence is ominous and frightening. If either Sen. Jesse Helms' (R-NC) or Sen. Orrin Hatch's (R-Utah) recently discussed abortion bills had been signed into law this year, many basic human rights would not be guaranteed to a majority of American people.

Richard Nangle

For example, access to information on contraception and birth control counseling would be severely limited if not eliminated altogether. Contraception in any form might be illegal. And women would not have the right to a safe and legal abortion. In fact, if abortion was illegal, women might even be forced by the government of the United States to carry out unwanted pregnancies even if they were life-threatening. Also, women who became pregnant as a result of being raped would be denied access to an abortion.

The Fundamentalist Christian group, Moral Majority is the most vocal of the groups representing the New Right. And each of these repressive issues and others that they support deserve to be discussed at length. But the most outstanding is the Moral Majority itself.

The Moral Majority was founded by Rev. Jerry Falwell of the Thomas Road Baptist Church in Lynchburg, Virginia. Moral Majority claims to have the support of most of the citizens of the United States. It believes that it can make this claim because of the over $1 million it collects each week, mostly from people who watch Falwell's "Old Time Gospel Hour".

The Moral Majority's goals also include prohibiting sex education in schools and preventing the Equal Rights Amendment from ever being ratified. In addition, they intend to define homosexuality as a sickness and prevent homosexuals from teaching in public schools.

Reaction to the New Right is varied, and on this campus the Real Majority was formed last November out of a need to address these issues from a humanistic stance. The Real Majority wholeheartedly refutes Falwell's claims of support. Polls have consistently shown for example that a majority of the American public believes that a woman should have the right to have an abortion if she so chooses.

From a simplistic viewpoint, it would appear that the Real Majority is as reactionary as the Moral Majority, pitting neo-liberalism against neo-conservatism. Nothing, however could be further from the truth.

The Real Majority promotes the basic rights of all human beings. They advocate the right of all people to receive sex education, birth control, and birth control counseling. They support the right of a woman to obtain a safe abortion if she so chooses. In addition, they support the Equal Rights Amendment and a wide variety of religious beliefs, lifestyles, and ideologies.

The Real Majority hopes to fight for these principles by actively supporting candidates for elective office who believe in basic human rights. This will be done on a local scale in 1982 and on a national level in 1984.

The goal is to educate the public on what the religious right is trying to do to the american way of life and then stop it dead in its tracks.

Bowwowwow

By DOUGLAS MUISE
Collegian Staff

So now Annabella Lwin of BOWWOWWOW is sixteen. Hmmm. Judging from the semi-nude of her plastered on the cover of I Want Candy she's still the band's steamy gimmick. Somehow I'm not surprised. I suppose it's one way to keep the records moving. Still, I'm suspicious of some sort of manipulation going on here 'a la Brooke Shields — but I guess that's another story in itself.

BOWWOWWOW play-up this jungle-rocker-chic image that's really kind of cute. In keeping with that image, there's this virtually indistinguishable conga-beat bombast running throughout the entire work. It's no wonder; the three guys in the group — Matt Ashman, Leroy Gorman, and Dave Barbossa are all graduates of the Adam and the Ants it's-OK-for-guys-to-dress-up-like-Errol Flynn-and-wear-make-up school of British pop. All this tribal rhythm stuff comes easy to them.

So what you've got is a basic Blitz beat topped with a Venturesque twing-twanging guitar layer and then Annabella's unrestrained crooning. Not bad overall. Most of you are probably familiar with "I Want Candy" by now, a bubbly, bouncingly infectious little ditty that gets your tush wiggling in nothing flat. "Go Wild in the Country," I must admit, has been a personal fave rave for quite a while. "'Cause truth loves to go naked!!" bellows Annabella with shivery exuberance — sounds good to me!

MAD ABOUT TOWN (RCA)
Slow Children

By DEAN RANZO
Collegian Correspondent

One of the best ways to convey the description of an album to someone is by comparing it to another. In the case of Slow Children's Mad About Town I was stumped. The closest thing I can think of is Bowwowwow without the Indian influence, but that's as destructive as a funkless Talking Heads. Slow Children has a definite unique quality in it's music. Mad About Town is detailed by an exploitive use of each instrument's character.

Mad About Town capitalizes upon the individual potential of each instrument, including vocals, as a distinct sound maker. All the musicians want to be heard instead of being limited by their respective roles. The blend is smooth and the arrangements are indisputably sound. And you never know if the next chord is coming from a guitar or synthesizer.

"One More Trauma" is a catchy dance tune enhanced by beautifully sung backing vocal dubs. The same vocal dubs are present throughout the album yet not overplayed.

The writing by female vocalist Pal Shazar is abstract yet approachable. Take "Unplugging The Vacuum" for instance:

I found a key in your keyhole
And I located your mental block
My one temptation was just to expose it
My desperation was begging it to talk

The real meaning of these words can be interpreted by anybody, but like unforseen destiny you never know when you've hit upon it.

Mad About Town could be considered electric pop, but the synthesizers are used more imaginatively than that. The lyrics though good are too deceptive and the tempo from one song to the next too unpredictable. Everything about this album is bizzare in an acceptable way, including the cover. The only thing missing from this bad dream menagerie is Vincent Price.

Urban Renewal, a new progressive instrumental dance band, will be performing Friday at Noon on Metawampe Lawn.

Cliff: A Preview

By PHILLIP PLANTE
Collegian Staff

At the age of 15, Jimmy Cliff turned down an offer of one shilling (less than ten dollars) for his first recorded song "Daisy got me Crazy."

This same sense of pride and purpose has always epitomized Jimmy Cliff's efforts to promote reggae music. Music which, more than any other, has developed a kind of world consciousness.

Cliff draws large audiences in a number of European, African, and South American countries. His persistance in developing an appreciative audience in the United States, may be coming to an end, however. In a recent Boston Globe interview he said, "This is my ninth tour of America and the number nine is a number of completion."

It is ironic that reggae has not maintained its popularity in America. Radio broadcasters from Miami and New Orleans exposed Cliff and his contemporaries — Bunny Livingston and Bob Marley — to the sounds of Sam Cook, Louis Jordan, Fats Domino, and Little Richard. In many ways modern reggae is a synthesis of native Jamaican and African musics with many American and Afro-American music forms.

As an artist, Cliff has constantly striven to transcend the mainstream reggae sound. After the revolutionary anti-establishment film The Harder They Come, which introduced songs like "You Can Get It If You Really Want" and "Many Rivers to Cross," Cliff explored more subtle and, some say, more "pop-orientated," sounds. Unfortunately his new material has received little airplay on American radio stations.

As a spokesman for the Jamaican people, Cliff, like Bob Marley has been a dynamic figure. The frustration of all Jamaican people, who still suffer from the after-effects of exploitive colonialist rule and a stormy political climate were epitomized by Cliff's portrayal of the rebellious Ivan in The Harder They Come.

Sylvan's Cultural society in need of your support

By YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Correspondent

Serving as a cultural bridge between Third World students and the White population, the Sylvan Cultural Society was founded by six Third World area residents.

The society was formed primarily as a response to the need for greater unity and cultural expression. Since its inception, the cultural society has been instrumenting the education area, academic counseling referrals, staff tutors, faculty advising and has also offered a number of different colloques and Third World film series.

In the educational area, the center provided staff tutors in professionalized fields; a business and an African history class. Among the faculty advisors there were Jean Moss, professor of the business course, Bobby Daniels and Jerry Quarlis.

The society, serving for four years as a resource center for a network of information from the university to the Third World students, and vice versa, disbanded in 1979 due to the many upperclass members that graduated; thus becoming inactive for a year.

Realizing the actual ongoing need for the center, the Sylvan professional staff took the effort to revitalize the center in 1980. With a big initial event, inviting all Third World students, the center got an average turn out of fifty students out of which twenty volunteered to work for the center.

Most of the activities of the revitalized center were fund-raisers, and at the end of 1980, one major program was held: the first annual Cultural Day.

During its Open House last Sunday, September 19, 1982, the active members of the Sylvan Cultural Society discussed future plans and activities in which Third World students will benefit. Among the activities planned were colloques dealing with racism, a Third World film series, plus a student lounge to be opened every night from Sunday through Thursday in the basement of Cashin.

As the Sylvan Area takes a new stand on racism, sexism and other isms, the Sylvan Cultural Society encourages students, new students in particular, to get involved and start getting more than just an education, but a cultural view of different races and ethnic groups.

Neither the Sylvan Cultural Society, nor any other group on campus could survive without the help of people who care enough to make the effort of volunteering their ethic experiences and personal service to the community.

Please look us over. Come to our next meeting, (to be announced), and join us in unifying all Third World students. We are here for YOU; because without YOU, WE would not exist.

Classroom 311 in the New Africa House is a crowded place to be on Wednesday afternoons between 2:30-4:30 p.m. The reason is an experimental class taught by professor Chester Davis of the Afro-American Studies Department.

Afro-American Studies 290D, Racism in American Television 1950 to the present, has caught the attention of about 45 students in a jam packed classroom. This course will seek to examine and analyze the portrayals of black people presented for entertainment purposes that have appeared on television during the last four decades.

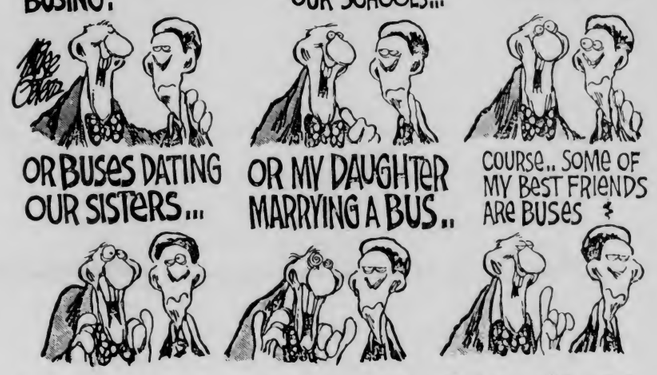
Professor Chester Davis speaking on behalf of the first year course said, "this is an introductory course and the first one in a series of experiments the department will be developing about blacks in popular culture."

Rosemarie Walton, a University of Massachusetts senior and class member finds the course very different but interesting. "The course is most significant and it gives me an insight into things I never took seriously before. On the other hand I look deeper into the problems and understand better about how blacks are being used in a sense by networks who exploit them for big money," said Walton.

Michelle Robinson, a 20 year old UMass sophomore finds the class significant and said, "it is enlightening because I never viewed these shows critically prior to now. But I also think we should see some white sit-coms so we can cross-analyze them, because there are no parallels between the Jeffersons and Good Times," said Robinson.

Yesterday's class began with a one minute take-off on the 1920's film segment of 'Steppin Fetchit'. "The show starred Lincoln Perry as the lazy, docile, shuffling stereotypical character that was the general perception of blacks in that period," said Davis.

The class then viewed a segment of the very popular T.V. sit-com Sanford and Son, that starred Fred Sanford as an insulting, scheming father, and Demond Wilson as the levelheaded son who continuously tries to cover up for his dad's mischievous behavior. In a segment that saw Aunt Esther (Lawanda Page) and her husband Woody, affectionately known as Woody the Wino, in a marital squabble that threatened to end in divorce. Members of the class made numerous comments they felt reflected stereotypes that carry over into everyday life. UMass senior Julian Tynes remarked, "the role played by Aunt Esther in that particular episode showed how the Black woman is portrayed as the domineering, churchgoing matriarch of the household, while Woody's role as the black male was about running around, drinking, and seeing other women," said Tynes.



United States in support of Apartheid

By JAMES R. WILLIAMS
Collegian Correspondent

The purposes of the United Nations being formed is stated in Article I of its Chapter:

1. To maintain world peace and security.
2. To develop friendly relations among all nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self determination.
3. To achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promotion and encouraging respect for human rights and for the fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion.

As can be easily ascertained from reading Article I, the premises on which the U.N. was founded reflect good intent. Yet when one surveys its thirty-two year history, it becomes clearly evident that the fundamental guidelines have in many instances been overlooked. This is especially true in the case of issues concerning South Africa and other countries in which the masses of the people are subjected to inhumane conditions in order to benefit a few.

One may be perplexed and wonder why countries would vote in favor of issues which would maintain the principles of such despicable regimes. The answer is that neo-colonialism supports these regimes as a means to extract huge profits. This is achieved through the system of employment in such nations. The masses of people are paid very low wages. Yet their productivity is high. This unbalance leads to enourmous profits. Thus countries like the U.S., the United Kingdom, and France vote to protect their economic growth in those nations holding to the old cliche that, "what's good for G.M. is good for America."

The following is a brief list of certain U.N. resolutions concerning South Africa and its system of Apartheid. The way that our government feels towards Apartheid is reflected in its voting record:

Resolution 2787XXVI, 6 December 1971
...Invites Economic and Social Council to request Commission on Human Rights to study policies and practices of racial discrimination, in particular, discrimination against peoples of African origins in all countries, and submit report to the General Assembly by its 28th Session. U.S. voted "no". (note the year here and how many people of African origin are in this country!)

...reaffirms Apartheid is a crime against humanity. U.S. abstained while ninety-seven countries voted "yes" so it passed.

Resolution 3151BXXVII, 14 December 1972
...Reaffirms the inalienable rights of all indigenous peoples of Southern Africa; recognizes the national liberation movements as rightful. Condemns treatment of freedom fighters and asks racist governments to withdraw military forces immediately. U.S. voted "no".

Resolution 395(V) 2 December 1950
...Asks South Africa specifically not to implement the Group Areas Act. U.S. voted "no". This is what led to the creation of the Bantustans in South Africa.

The U.S. has implemented into its social and economical systems a policy known as "Equal Opportunity". The creation of "Equal Opportunity" came about as a means to deal with the racism that was rampant throughout our country. In South Africa the socioeconomical system of "Apartheid" segregates and openly discriminates against people solely on the basis of their skin color. Thus one would be led to believe that the U.S., solely on its stated policy, would openly reject this "abhorrent" system regarding race. Why then do they vote in favor of the South African government? Former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger tried to explain the rationale this way:

"The Whites are here to stay and the only way that constructive change can come about is through them. There is no hope for the Blacks to gain the political rights they seek through violence, which will only lead to chaos and increased opportunities for the communist. We can, by selective relaxation of our stance toward the white regime, encourage some modification of their current racial and colonial policies. ...Our tangible interests form a basis for our contacts in the region and these can be maintained at an acceptable political cost."

The time has come where we have to cease dealing with world affairs solely in terms of capitalism and socialism, democracy and communism, and the advantages we can create for big business. Instead we must view world politics in terms of humanity, justice, civil rights and the other principles which our nation was supposedly founded on (that's why we needed a civil rights movement in the sixties and E.R.A. has yet to pass!!). Through these principles and not through the escalation of an arms race (to bolster the capitalistic system) we will finally be on the tracks towards solving the problems which counteract world peace. South Africa is just one of these obstacles.

Linksters take first place in the URI Invitational

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

When University of Massachusetts men's varsity golf coach Ed Vlach took his team down to the University of Rhode Island Invitational on Tuesday, he didn't expect that his team would come away with the team trophy for first place.

Vlach knew that with the exception of seniors Charlie Scavone and Rick Murphy, a lot of the pressure of winning lied with a group of freshmen.

Well, Scavone and Murphy both did their jobs, taking first and second places respectively overall for the tournament and the freshmen came through with more than adequate performances. The end result was that Vlach's team did come home Tuesday night with the URI Invitational title.

"I was pleased with the result because it's been such a long drought since we finished first in anything but a one on one competition," said Vlach.

In the overall competition, UMass had a 16 point victory margin over the runner-up, the University of Maine. The Minutemen had a team score of 402 while UMaine logged a 418. Following Maine were URI and the University of New Hampshire who tied for third place with identical scores of 421. Vermont finished fifth with a 422 and Holy Cross did not show up for the match.

This title should brighten the hopes of the UMass linksters for some success at the upcoming New England championships which are scheduled to be held this weekend at the Cranwell Club and the Lenex/Pittsfield Country Club, but Vlach is remaining conservative in his expectations.

"I don't have any illusions because we have some very strong teams in the New England area," said Vlach.

In order to be successful, the team will need the continued good play of freshmen Bill Meade, who placed third at URI with a score of 80 and Mark Zenovitch, who finished ninth with an 82.

Also competing for the Minutemen at URI were Allan Verce, who had an 86, John Couig, who scored an 87 and Tyler Shearer, who got an 88.

Only five players can compete in the New Englands, so Vlach will be watching these players and some other freshmen who he says are very capable of earning themselves a spot on this weekend's roster very carefully this week.

Advertisers ready for strike

NEW YORK (AP) — Advertisers for beer and other products pitched to the millions of men who watch professional football on TV were looking Wednesday for new ways to push their wares as the players' strike headed toward its first weekend.

"We're going to look at alternative programs, but for now we plan to stay with whatever substitute programming the networks offer," said Jerry Solomon, an executive vice president at the Darcy, McManus & Masius advertising agency, whose clients include the Anheuser-Busch Cos.

"It would be nice and easy and better if there were no strike," Solomon said, "but a limited strike — two or three weeks? — won't have any real effect on us."

National Football League players began their first in-season strike after ABC's broadcast of the New York GiantsGreen Bay Packers game Monday night. An ABC game between Atlanta and Kansas City, scheduled for Thursday night, will be the first affected by the walkout.

ABC announced plans to broadcast a theatrical film, "The Cheap Detective," and a special edition of the network's "20-20" newsmagazine, instead of the game.

NBC planned to substitute live professional football from Canada for its regular slate of NFL games, and Curt Block, a network vice president, said, "When we thought it was NFL, we were sold out, and no one has pulled away yet."

CBS said it would broadcast a rerun of Super Bowl XVI between San Francisco and Cincinnati, played last January.

"We'll all look at the ratings, and compare them with what we expect for NFL football," said Solomon. "The costs will be adjusted respectively."

Block, at NBC, said compensation for lower-than-normal ratings might include advertising time elsewhere on the schedule. Advertisers on NBC pay about $80,000 for a 30-second spot during a weekend regular season game, and generally anticipate an audience of at least 12 million and perhaps 15 million homes.

Advertisers, by one industry estimate, were prepared to spend about $400 million for commercials on pro football games this season. Breweries and automakers would be among the hardest hit by a long strike, and with 1983 models about to be introduced, dissatification was most intense in Detroit.

Chrysler Corp., which planned to spend 25 percent of its fall advertising budget on NFL football, was the first to announce an alternative arrangement, with cable TV entrepreneur Ted Turner.

Turner's Atlanta-based superstation, WTBS, would carry a series of all-star games now being considered by the NFL Players Association.

The networks would be affected by a long strike, too. The three — ABC, CBS and NBC — recently signed a $2.1 billion, five-year contract with the NFL, and would not pay the league for canceled games.

When University of Massachusetts head football coach Bob Pickett took his team to Worcester last Saturday to battle the Crusaders of Holy Cross he probably figured the worst that could happen would be a Minuteman loss.

But a bad dream turned into a coache's nightmare for Pickett as he watched his team drop a 27-14 decision to the Crusaders and in the process looked on as three Minuteman starters were wheeled off the field with injuries serious enough to keep them out of action for Saturday's clash against Harvard.

Middle guard, Scott Rose suffered a broker ankle that will keep the senior from Wareham, MA on the sidelines at least three weeks. Luckily, Rose's injury is not as serious as originally thought and there is a slight chance Rose will be able to play again this year.

Big Dan Brennan will replace Rose on the defensive line and Pickett feels Brennan can get the job done.

"Brennan has been hurt a little this season (shoulder) so this is really his chance. He's a big person with good size and strength," said Pickett.

The 6'6" 265 pound Brennan has been an offensive tackle his first two years at UMass but was switched to the defensive line to take advantage of his size and strength.

Linebacker Steve Foreman will also be out of action Saturday against the Crimson with an injured shoulder and will be replaced by junior Craig Lesinski.

"In this particular position it hurts us more depth wise than anything else because Lesinski has been playing fairly regularly," said Pickett.

Finally, center Tony Pasquale went down last week with a knee injury. The second team All-Yankee Conference choice will be replaced by sophmore Ken Runge.

"We thought Runge would be our starting center," said Pickett. "But we moved Pasquale there because we thought it would help our football team so we have a quality person to replace Tony."

According to Pickett, injuries are prevalent in all sports, especially football.

"It seems like there are always nagging injuries every week but it also seems like the serious injuries have a tendency to come in bunches."

Notwithstanding performance on the field what effect does an injury filled week like this have on a team?

"We don't really like to talk about injuries because it's a sensitive issue to deal with," said Pickett. "It certainly hurts emotionally but when you've been in football as long as I have you realize that it is part of the game."

One man's strike plight

By JIM FLOYD

He said that he called himself Kenmore Square Kelly. The name seemed adequate enough, since he was introducing himself in the section of Boston known as Kenmore Square.

He was quite an odd-looking character, this Kelly was. He wore fashion plate designer clothes that bore the Salvation Army tag and obviously shaved in a back alley with a broken beer bottle when his five o'clock shadow reached five or six days.

I thought he was a common bum, nothing but a panhandler judging by his exterior appearance, but the story he told me proved beyond the shadow of a doubt that you can't judge a book by its cover.

My friend Jay and I were just walking out of a local nightspot at which Jay worked this past Monday afternoon and naturally the topic of conversation was the just announced NFL strike.

"What! Hey, wait a minute kid," I heard over my shoulder.

It was Kenmore, his eyes burning with fear.

"They can't strike," he said, "They just can't. If they strike too long I might lose my family."

"Calm down hobo," Jay snarled at him, "Go have another bottle of Mad Dog why don't you."

But, for some reason, I saw that there was more to his story than your average stupor. I asked him why the NFL couldn't strike and what his family had to do with the whole thing.

"Don't you understand," he rasped, "I'm an ultimate football fanatic. I live for the NFL. I even like Pete Rozelle.

"Each year," he continued, "My wife throws me out of the house at the beginning of the first pre-season game and I can't come home until the Super Bowl. I live with the bums and winos so I can afford the exorbitant prices at Schaefer Stadium and go on pilgrimmages to New York and Buffalo."

"He's lying," Jay said.

"Fumble," screamed Kenmore, as he dove for an empty beer can rolling down the street.

"The problem is," he said, once he had safely passed the can to a rat who had run a quick down and out by the dumpster behind the Kenmore Club. "The wife decided that if I was going to marry football for six months of the year, then fine, but I wasn't going to infect the kids with footballitis too.

"A strike could mean a prolonged season," he said, "And those winter months are pretty cold. I can't go home because then I might have to stay there and miss a game. I'd just die."

And then he left us, almost as quickly as he had descended upon us, chanting all the way down Commonwealth Avenue: "Thank God for college football, NCAA, please don't fail me now."

And just as he was almost out of earshot, he turned and shouted back: "Take UMass by nine over the preppies."

"Who's going to win the Super Bowl," I shouted back.

"The Bengals have the best looking uniforms," he yelled before turning down an alley.

"That man knows his football," I said confidently to Jay.

GARRY PEARSON

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

The situation for a choice for the Collegian Player-of-the-Game is almost exactly reversed from last week's choice among the multitudes following the West Chester game.

This week, the decision has to come after a 27-14 loss to Holy Cross. But, realistically, there really isn't any problem with deciding who to give the award to.

Just do what the Minuteman offense has been doing for the past three years. When in doubt, give it to Pearson.

It isn't really a major choice. On any given week Garry Pearson deserves to be somebody's MVP. The senior tailback from Bristol, Connecticut has been a mainstay for point production ever since he took over the starting tailback slot in his sophmore year at UMass.

All Pearson did on against Holy Cross was run for 164 yards on the ground, including a 56 yard touchdown run to up his UMass career records of all-purpose rushing (now 3781 yards) and rushing (now 2539 yards) some more.

To date this season, Pearson has gained 311 yards rushing, good enough for a 155.5 yards per game and 6.3 yards per carry average. These figures make him the leading rusher in the Yankee Conference.

The All-American is, quite simply, a wonderful runner to watch. He possesses adequate speed and a good strong body. But, what separates Pearson from the other tailbacks who have worn a UMass Minuteman uniform is his ability to cut and weave, to find the open spot in the defense where there isn't an open spot.

Aside from the records and this season (which is, of course, above all other considerations at this juncture) the big question on Garry Pearson, UMass rushing star, has got to be whether he has the size and durability to make it in the professional ranks.

The Holy Cross defense certainly tried to show Pearson that he wasn't able to handle the big hits this past Saturday. Pearson was punished every time he carried the ball (22 times). After each bone-crunching hit, he simply shrugged it off and trotted back to his spot in the UMass huddle. Next down, he was ready to try to gain more yardage and didn't even seem to remember the previous hits he had taken. Durable, you bet.

Oftentimes, Garry gets overlooked when it comes time to select a Player-of-the-Game. That because he's just so good that it's easy to overlook another of his 100 yard games.

So, with apologies for the times Pearson could have received the pick, congratulations for being named Collegian Player-of-the-Game Garry Pearson.

Tempers flare at massacre protest

By MIKE FOLEY

Shouted chants cut through emotional speeches and tempers flared as about 250 people gathered at a noon rally yesterday before a drenching rain extinguished the conflagration.

The rally on the steps of the Student Union Building was called by the Organization of Arab Students (OAS) to voice their views on recent events in the Middle East. But several pro-Israeli groups came to the rally to tell their side of the story.

The proPalestinian groups lined the building's steps. The pro-Israeli groups faced them a few yards away. As the shouting grew louder and a light rain began to fall, the opposing sides moved closer and a war of words nearly turned into a brawl.

Leaders from groups of both sides stepped in to push back the crowds and restrain a few overzealous individuals.

"The massacre of the Palestinian people was cold blooded murder. Many, many of these people were homeless and hopeless people," said the president of OAS, Mike Osseiran.

The pro-Palestinian group waved signs that read "No to Israel", "Begin is a Nazi" and "Israel" with the first letter drawn in the shape of a swastika. They shouted "Long live Palestine...Free Free Lebanon...Israel out of Lebanon now!"

"Stop the Killing...start the talking...Peace now...peace now," the pro-Israeli groups shouted back.

Howard Glance carried a sign reading, "Arafat cuts student loans." He wanted to show how ludicrous the pro-Palestinian signs were with an equally ludicrous sign, he explained.

Yesterday's rally was a repeat of a rally held Monday. Ossieran said the second rally was necessary "to tell the American people what's really happening. Naturally not everyone heard us."

The rally participants did not march to downtown Amherst as planned because of the rain, Ossieran said.

"We are here to mourn the death of the Palestinians as Zionists," said Richard Kirchen, 17, of the Student Alliance for Israel, which is associated with Hillel. "These people (the pro-Palestinians) are not here to mourn the death of the Palestinians, but are using it as a ploy to denounce the reality of Israel," he said.

"Between me and the Israeli's is blood," said Sam Chamselvdine, who is from southern Lebanon. He said his cousin and some of his friends were killed in the recent fighting there.

"Israel destroyed my city and if I am still alive or my children are still alive I fight Israel until they are out of Israel."

Band director handcuffed at Faneuil Hall

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

The director of the University of Massachusetts Marching Band was handcuffed and ordered to sign a trespass notice at Faneuil Hall Marketplace in Boston last Saturday evening because the band was playing while it marched through the marketplace.

George N. Parks said three members of the Faneuil Hall security "insisted that I accompany them to the security office." He said the Boston Police were not involved and only one of the guards was in uniform.

Jeanne Parks, the band director's wife, added that her husband was "forcefully handcuffed."

Parks said the band was marching through the Faneuil Hall and Quincy Market area playing a drum roll when he was approached by a security guard and told he was disturbing the peace.

Walter Hauer, assistant general manager of Faneuil Hall Marketplace said the UMass band was disturbing other people that were performing and did not have a permit to play on that particular day. He said the permit they had was for the coming weekend.

Concerning the handcuffing incident, Hauer said, "Evidently he was refusing to come along when people asked him to come to the office."

"I tried very hard not to make a scene," Parks said. "I said I'd sign their stupid piece of paper. He (security guard) got his ego trip and then I just left. He was into being a power guy."

"He was an overzealous security guard who felt that through our marching we were disturbing their public tranquility," he said.

Parks said the band had just finished playing at Government Center and was leaving by marching through the marketplace. He said this has become a tradition with the band over the last five years.

The band had played during the halftime show of the UMass-Holly Cross football game earlier in the day and later played in the halftime show for the New England Patriots-New York Jets National Football League game in Foxboro on Sunday.

The incident, Parks said, was "kind of a shady situation that shouldn't have happened. They weren't into letting me know what my options were."

When the security guard said the band was disturbing the peace Parks said he replied that the band was "the most orderly thing Faneuil Hall had seen in months."

Parks said the father of one of the band members has apparently decided to file suit against Faneuil Hall security.

Fairness, effectiveness of death penalty debated

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

The emotions surrounding the issue of capital punishment boiled to the surface during a debate on the issue in the Student Union Ballroom last night.

The death penalty issue, which will be before the voters on the November election ballot, drew sharp criticism from state Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst, and William J. Bowers, director for the Center for Applied Social Research at Northeastern University in Boston, as well as many of those in the audience.

"We want a system that maximizes justice and controls crime...capital punishment is bankrupt on both counts," said Bowers, who said he has researched the issue and its relationship to race and class for the past 10 years.

"The very stark picture between the races on the imposition of the death sentence is that blacks are executed at younger ages, have less appeals and are executed for lesser crimes," Bower said.

Supporting the capital punishment question, Dennis J. Curran, deputy legal counsel to Gov. Edward J. King, and state Rep. Marie J. Parents, D-Milford, said the threat of execution will deter many people from commiting violent crimes.

"Have empathy not for the murderer, but for the victims and the families," Parente said. "If punishment deters the crime, then maybe capital punishment will deter capital crime."

Following the debate, a straw poll of the audience showed eight people in favor of the death penalty, 41 opposed and 10 undecided. When asked if anyone had changed their minds after hearing the debate, one woman raised her hand.

Earlier in the evening, many of the students and area residents in the audience sharply questioned the speakers who favored capital punishment, accusing them of hypocrisy.

Police scuffle with a demonstrator yesterday near the home of Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin in Jerusalem, as about 3,000 people marched there to protest his rejection of an inquiry into the Beirut refugee camp massacres. The march was reported orderly except for a brief fight with about 20 Begin supporters.

Calls for his resignation surround Begin at home

JERUSALEM (AP) — About 3,000 people chanting "Begin resign!" marched on Prime Minister Menachem Begin's home yesterday to protest his rejection of an immediate inquiry into the Beirut refugee camp massacres.

Elsewhere in the city, police hauled away several people who shouted "Murderer!" and "Monster!" at Defense Minister Ariel Sharon as he spoke at a memorial ceremony for paratroopers killed in Israel's wars.

Brig. Gen. Amram Mitzna, head of the Israeli army staff college, asked yesterday to be relieved of his post and put on leave "in consequence of the events of recent days in Beirut," the military command announced. He was the first senior officer to take such personal action to protest the massacre.

A terse communique issued in Tel Aviv said the military chief of staff, Lt. Gen. Raphael Eytan, met with Mitzna and arranged for him to meet Friday with Sharon. It did not say whether Eytan agreed to relieve Mitzna of his post.

The 3,000 demonstrators, organized by the Peace Now movement, marched from the center of town, but were stopped by police about 150 yards from Begin's home. Apart from a brief fight with about 20 Begin supporters, the march was orderly and peaceful.

"Resign for the shame of Beirut," read one poster carried by the marchers. A hand-painted sheet picturing a snarling Sharon read: "Stop that monster."

In Tel Aviv, U.S. presidential envoy Philip C. Habib arrived from Lebanon to continue the second phase of a mission that began with his negotiation of the Palestine Liberation Organization withdrawal from Beirut earlier this month.

Habib immediately went into talks with Sharon. He is to meet with Begin and Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir on Friday to discuss withdrawal of all foreign forces — Israeli, Syrian and Palestinian — from Lebanon.

New Right rebuffed as Senate kills prayer bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate voted 79-16 yesterday to end consideration of legislation designed to put organized prayer back in public schools.

The vote marked a final defeat for "New Right" conservatives, led by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., who have battled unsuccessfully all week to break a liberal filibuster against the measure.

Earlier, the Senate defeated, 53-45, Helms' fourth and final attempt to curb the filibuster. Conservatives fell seven votes short of the 60 needed to invoke "cloture."

Republican Leader Howard Baker of Tennessee urged the Senate to delete the prayer issue from the debt-limit bill to which it was attached. He said that while he supports Helms' bill, there appeared no way to break the filibuster.

"At some point this has to end," Baker said, "and this is that point."

But Helms vowed to take up the battle again next year, when this fall's elections may give him more conservative allies.

"We need more horses," Helms said.

With the end of the prayer fight, the Senate approved, 50-41, the federal debt limit bill to which the Helms amendment had been attached.

The bill, which now goes to the White House for President Reagan's signature, would increase the $400-billion permanent debt limit to $1.3 trillion, thus allowing the government to borrow enough money to pay its bills.

On other fiscal matters, the Senate Appropriations Committee recommended that Congress spend $201.3 billion in the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1 for the military.

The House Appropriations subcommittee on defense is scheduled to begin considering its own spending bill next week. Full House and Senate action is expected in a post-election session.

Meanwhile, the Senate Appropriations Committee approved, by voice vote, a one-year suspension of the Federal Trade Commission's power to regulate doctors, lawyers and other state-licensed professionals.

The provision was attached to a stopgap spending measure designed to keep money flowing to the federal government after the fiscal year begins Oct. 1.

In other business, the Reagan administration took a position on the wilderness bill for the first time, telling Congress that if it agrees to halt expansion of the wilderness system, the administration will agree to halt oil and natural gas drilling in the preserves.

King signs bill to put referendum on ballot

BOSTON — After months of rancor, the Massachusetts House and Senate agreed on a bill yesterday allowing a test of public sentiment in the November election on halting the nuclear arms race.

Governor Edward J. King signed the bill just before the 5 p.m. deadline for getting referendums on the ballot, saying it "will give all the voters of the commonwealth a chance to express their opinion on this crucial question."

The question finally approved is virtually identical to that adopted by Wisconsin voters 3-to-1 on Sept. 14, and eliminates references to a weapons freeze, the contentious issue that blocked passage of the original bill.

"The liberals, I sometimes think, are carrying the baggage for the Russians who want a nuclear freeze because they know how far ahead they are," said Rep. Royall Switzler, R-Wellesley.

The ballot question is: "Shall the secretary of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts inform the President and the Congress of the United States that is is the desire of the people of Massachusetts to have the government of the United States work vigorously to negotiate a mutual nuclear weapons moratorium and reduction, with appropriate verification, with the Soviet Union and other nations."

Kennedy accentuates his humanity in ads

WASHINGTON — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy is launching a costly re-election advertising campaign in Massachusetts that emphasizes the tragedies in his life and highlights his role as "head of the entire Kennedy clan."

In all, the ads confront directly the so-called "character" issue that helped doom Kennedy's 1980 presidential bid and that aides concede he must overcome for a possible White House campaign to succeed in 1984.

In one poignant moment, Kennedy's niece, Kathleen Kennedy Townsend, recalls on camera that she was married on the same day the senator's son, Teddy, had a leg amputated for cancer.

She "offered to cancel the wedding," Mrs. Townsend said. "And he Kennedy said no, don't do that at all."

"And he made sure that he came to the house and picked me up and walked me down the aisle" before returning to his son's bedside. Mrs. Townsend's father, Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, was assassinated in 1968.

The commercials, which cost $150,00 to $200,000 to produce and will cost about $650,000 to air beginning this weekend, are the work of Michael Kaye, a Los Angeles-based media consultant.

Opposing views clash on cigarette dangers

NEW YORK — The headline read: Low-Tar And Nicotine Cigarettes Pose Less Danger. The story was about a study by the American Cancer Society.

Less than a week later, another headline appeared: Evidence 'Doubtful, That Low-Tar Cigarettes Reduce Health Risk. This time, it was the National Academy of Sciences speaking. Two studies by distinguished scientific organizations had reached opposite conclusions. Why?

The answer, according to interviews with doctors around the country, is that the reduced risk associated with low-tar cigarettes — if any — is very small.

The American Cancer Society study of 1 million people from 1960 to 1972 found that low-tar cigarettes were slightly less harmful than other cigarettes. Smokers of low-tar cigarettes — defined as cigarettes with less than 18 milligrams of tar — were 26 percent less likely to die of lung cancer than other smokers.

That may sound like an impressive statistic until it is put into perspective. Smokers of low-tar cigarettes are indeed slightly better off. But men who smoke low-tars are still eight or nine times more likely to get lung cancer than men who don't smoke, says Lawrence Garfinkel of the cancer society. For high-tar smokers, Garfinkel said, the risk is 10 or 11 times greater than for non-smokers.

For women, whose incidence of smoking and lung cancer is much lower, the figures are slightly different. Women who smoke low-tars have a slight advantage over other women smokers, but are still three times as likely to get lung cancer as non-smokers, Garfinkel says.

Most studies of low-tar cigarettes have found evidence that they are slightly less harmful.

King throws support to Democratic ticket

BOSTON — Saying that remaining within the Democratic Party is the best way to change it, outgoing Gov. Edward J. King announced his support yesterday for the state Democratic ticket in November, including longtime political foe Michael S. Dukakis.

"Weighing all the factors, the Democratic Party, broad as it is, is my party, and I am supporting the Democratic ticket; Gov. Dukakis is on that ticket," said King, the conservative incumbent who was defeated by Dukakis in the Sept. 14 primary.

He said, however, that he wouldn't campaign.

King beat his predecessor in the governor's office in the 1978 primary.

"Of course the facts speak for themselves," said King. "We ran against each other all year, and we ran against each other in 1978. We disagree on many issues...

"But I am the titular head of the Democratic Party, which is so broad in its principles that it encompasses the most divergent of views. The former governor and I have the most divergent of views; we have been 180 degrees apart."

After discussions seeking "areas of mutual agreement, my staff now says that we are only 179 degrees apart," King said at a news conference.

Keefe voted chairman by Board of Governors

By LAURIE FISHER
Collegian Staff

A new chairman has been elected to the Campus Center/Student Union Board of Governors (BOG).

Ron Keefe will fill the chairman position left vacant by Peter Lucas. Keefe said he planned on making students aware of issues important to them.

"It is my desire and the BOG's goal to educate students about issues they take for granted; where the mandatory $38 per semester Campus Center fee is going and why," Keefe said.

"When I leave this University I want to be able to say students played a more active role in the issues which concern them," Keefe said.

Keefe is a Third World representative on the board. He was appointed to that position by Tony Crayton, former director of the Third World Affairs Office.

Keefe, a senior economics major was manager of Union Records Unlimited, a student-run co-op in the Student Union Building. He said he will continue his involvement with the store by volunteering to train new employees.

He also worked with the administration as the only undergraduate student representative on the Chancellor's Long Range Planning Committee.

The BOG was funded $124,000 this year. The money will be spent on behalf of the students; providing and maintaining space in the Campus Center for student groups and co-ops, Keefe said.

"In the last three years, competition has developed between the University Store and the various co-ops: the photo co-op, the sporting goods co-op, and the Union Records Unlimited co-op, making the survivial of the co-ops an issue. I will try to see that these student run businesses not only survive but also prosper," Keefe said.

The BOG is exploring the possibility of opening a student run book co-op in the Campus Center as an alternative to the overpriced text book annex," Keefe said.

"The text book annex can get along with lower profit margins," Keefe added. A book co-op in the campus center would pressure them into lowering their prices, he said.

"Keefe is extremely capable and the best selection for the chair position due to his extensive background in dealing with students and administration at this university," said William Harris, director of the Campus Center.

In other business last night, the board approved several motions written up over the summer.

The motions include the approval of price increases at the Hatch, the Blue Wall and coffee shop to take effect immediately.

The Board also announced it is now accepting applications for several paid coordinator postions.

Sen. Kennedy to lead UMass nuclear freeze rally

By BILL WALL
Collegian Staff

Senator Edward M. Kennedy and singer James Taylor will be among the invited speakers at a nuclear arms freeze rally scheduled for October 5 at the University of Massachusetts.

The rally is being sponsored by various area groups including the Western Massachusetts Coalition for a Nuclear Weapons Freeze, the Amherst Disarmament Coalition, and the University of Massachusetts Peacemakers.

"The whole purpose of the rally is that the issue of a nuclear freeze is still alive and it is something that every person should get involved in," said Mike Counter, UMass campus coordinator for the Committee to Re-Elect Senator Kennedy. "At the final analysis survival of the human race is at stake."

The rally is scheduled for the Student Union Ballroom, but "it might end up being moved outdoors," said Chris Alberti of the Kennedy campaign headquarters in Boston, which is organizing the rally.

Alberti said he did not believe Kennedy was jumping a politically expedient bandwagon but was actually one of the main standard-bearers of the movement. "He's carried the issue in the U.S. Senate. Along with Mark Hatfield of Oregon, they've sponsored a resolution in favor of the freeze. Kennedy has made the nuclear freeze his number one priority." Alberti said he hoped the rally would "generate some kind of attention on this issue accross the state."

Alberti said the rally has been put together in a matter of two or three weeks. "We've invited the entire Massachusetts Congressional delegation, although none have indicated they will come to Amherst as of now," Alberti said.

One of the aspects of the rally will be a voter registration drive, Counter said.

"The day of the rally is the last day to register to vote before the November elections. One aim of the rally is to call attention to the state nuclear freeze referendum which was recently placed on the ballot," Counter said.

Actress Lauren Bacall, original freeze founder Randall Forsberg and Peter Yarrow of the singing group "Peter, Paul, and Mary" will also attend, Alberti said. James Taylor and Peter Yarrow will also perform; Alberti said.

Jim Murphy, president of the Undergraduate Student Senate, said new UMass Chancellor Joseph Duffy will also speak at the rally.

"It's about time headway was made in stopping the arms race," Murphy said.

Poll result elicits various views of UMass campus

By DIANE KADZIS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts campus has been called many things both ugly and beautiful.

Students from the five colleges, participating in a recent survey conducted by the Five College Center, named the UMass campus to be the most unattractive of the area colleges.

While some respondents to the survey are in disagreement with majority opinion, others look past the University's diverse curriculum and its social opportunities to direct their gaze upon the physical environment which helps define the many lifestyles of UMass students.

Barnabas Kane, a sophomore environmental design major, said he finds the campus to be "interesting" because it is a "playground for architecture," but at the same time it is missing the "unity" needed to tie the campus together for a functionally appealing effect.

David Folweiler, a sophomore electrical engineering major, said the "unattractiveness" that does exist as part of the campus is due to the "coldness of concrete."

Collegian photos by Jim Powers

The rural, country setting of the fields and trees surrounding the Orchard Hill residential area (above) stands in stark contrast to the straight lines of concrete slabs which constitute much of the University of Massachusetts campus, such as the Campus Center and parking garage (top).

Placing the University on equal footing with other publically funded colleges, Barrie B. Greenbie, professor of landscape and regional planning department, said UMass "does not suffer from dullness. It does suffer chaotically, functionally and aesthetically."

Comparing UMass to smaller universities, Greenbie said, accents its "incredibly diverse and wide range of social types. It is always more difficult to accomodate so many different groups."

Greenbie said the campus' medley of architectural design — ranging from the Old Chapel to the Fine Arts Center — could work to its favor visually. But because buildings constructed during different periods of expansion lack an "easy, inviting and hospitable link," the campus lacks identity.

On the east side of campus, Greenbie said, the Graduate Research Center does not complement the older and more traditional Stockbridge and Draper Halls. Also, the "excellent" design of the Campus Center "relates poorly to the mediorcre fifties architecture" of the Student Union, he said.

Companion group seeks to alleviate pangs of loneliness

By ELLEN RYDER
Collegian Correspondent

A little girl of alcoholic parents is constantly abused. A little boy of divorced parents rarely sees his father and desperately needs an older male to identify with. A Special Needs teenager is not accepted by her peers and needs someone to call a friend.

Such children are the concern of the Companion Program at Amherst Community Resource Center. The program, coordinated by Maria Spears, is an outreach to children from ages three to eighteen who are in difficult or traumatic situations. The program matches volunteers with children. The volunteers become like a big brother or big sister and help to supply the caring and companionship the child may lack.

"Most of the children are from single-parent homes," Spears said. "The parents are usually working full-time and under some stress. In general, the family may not be giving the child the affection or attention it is used to."

Boys, in particular, Spears said, may not have much contact with men as role models. One of the current male volunteers, Larry Rosenberg, is a professor of marketing at the University of Massachusetts.

"I do not have children," Rosenberg said. But "I enjoy being with children — it relaxes me. I'm realizing that children need this kind of program."

Rosenberg also said it is good for a boy to express himself to a male figure.

"The rest is intangible — the boy is getting acceptance and encouragement," he said.

Anne Pazanno, a senior from Stoneham and a Community Services major at the University of Massachusetts, became involved in the program as a volunteer and later as an intern.

"It alleviates some of their (the children's) stress," Pazanno said of the program. "I think they really need someone all for themselves."

Pazanno added that her own volunteer-child relationship had grown into a close one. Her companion is a sixteen-year-old girl with learning disabilities.

"It'll always write to her and see her. We're really close, like sisters," she said.

Outings with the child might include baking, going to the movies, playing video games, visiting museums, or attending sports events. Pazanno said her companion even helped her babysit and had become friendly with many of her other friends.

The Companion Program currently has seventeen volunteers but needs eighteen more. Eleven of the seventeen volunteers are students. Volunteers are asked to commit themselves to the program for a minimum of nine months, for about three to five hours a week. One major handicap of the program, Spears said, is the shortage of male volunteers.

The Companion Program welcomes all volunteers and stresses special need for male volunteers. To contact coordinator Maria Spears, call 253-2591 or visit the Amherst Community Resource Center, Bangs Community Center, Boltwood Walk, Amherst.

Gnomon copy strike remains unresolved

By DAVE LINTON
Collegian Correspondent

No agreement was reached between Gnomon Copy strikers and owners at a negotiation meeting Tuesday night that both sides described as calm, cool and collected.

The meeting lasted four hours and left issues of wages, health insurance, working conditions, and job security unresolved.

"We mostly talked about less controversial aspects of the contract," Gnomon employee Tobia Saisa said.

Negotiations will continue at 8 a.m. Tuesday.

Even if a settlement is reached, workers will be put on a waiting list based on seniority before being allowed to return to work, co-owner Roland Wetherbee said.

But Saisa said workers will continue to strike if they are not all allowed to work.

"We're not going to agree to a waiting list. Scabs out, regular workers back," said Saisa, who would be first on the list, having worked full-time for the past six years.

Wetherbee said employees on strike will have to return as postions open, as he has to rebuild his business.

"As far as worker productivity, they worked hard to tear the business down and now they're going to have to bust their humps to build it back up," he said.

Business at the store has declined 80 to 90 percent because of the strike, now beginning its third week, according to striking employees.

Carol MacColl accompanies her co-workers into third week of strike against Gnomon Copy.

At the next meeting the union will discuss a proposal by the company for wages based on productivity, Saisa said. Las year, corporation Vice-President John Sytek made a similar proposal which the union rejected because it actually decreased wages, Saisa said.

Saisa said the wage productivity proposal enables the company to pick a business period they consider to be normal and base wages on that rate. Wages are then determined on the relationship between current production and the base period.

However, Saisa said, workers are unsatisfied with this proposal. "Workers don't have complete control of productivity because the work is cyclical and the machines occasionally break down," he said.

"There is more work in September than in January. Workers would have no idea how much they're making. Wages would go up and down."

However, co-owner Catherine Ianacchino said pay based on productivity is the best way to be paid.

"The base pay is set. Productivity is an addition to base pay. It has nothing to do with the machines being down," she said.

A rally is scheduled from 4 to 6 p.m. on Tuesday at Gnomon following the negotiations.

"If we do reach a settlement it will be a celebration. We don't expect a settlement but it is a possibility," Saisa said.

"We think we"ll have a settlement reached on Tuesday," Wetherbee said.

Picketers to target local purveyors of pornography tomorrow

By DEBBIE KRUPCZAK
Collegian Correspondent

The Women's Forum Against Media Violence will be picketing pornography distributors in Amherst and Northampton tomorrow in an attempt to help people become more aware of the presence of pornography in the community.

The forum is not trying to destroy pornography as a whole, but rather bring much needed attention to it, said Julie Melrose, a member of the forum and organizer of the demonstration.

"Many people are uncomfortable with having pornography displayed," she said. "We are encouraging people to speak with store owners about it."

Karen McKenna Santoriello, also a member, said, "We want to make people conscious that pornography exists."

There will be two demonstrations tomorrow. The group picketing in Northampton will start at Pulaski Park and will be lead by Kathleen Engel of Northampton. The demonstration in Amherst will be lead by Melrose and Dona Brown of Amherst and will begin at the Pleasant Street bus stop. Both demonstrations are scheduled to run from 10:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. The demonstrations are expected to be peaceful.

The Women's Forum Against Media Violence was founded by Elizabeth Dworan and a group of five other women two years ago upon receiving a grant from the Haymarket Foundation in Boston. The forum currently has 45 members.

The Women's Forum aims to educate the community through various workshops and slide show presentations. The slide shows are a combination of ones previously shown in New York and in San Francisco. The workshops cover topics such as child sexual abuse and the pornography of women and children on magazine and record covers.

"Media violence is on the upswing," Melrose said.

The pornographic industry is expected to make a $4.5 million profit this year, she said.

Defendants in Fitzwilly's suit cry foul at tactics of plaintiff

By AMY JENNESS
Collegian Staff

Fitzwilly's restaurant owner, Roger W. Kirwood, and his attorneys, Richard O. Hayes and Frederick L. Sullivan, denied yesterday charges contained in a sexual harassment suit filed by a former waitress and criticized the legal tactics used by her attorneys.

Miriam Domonique, 24, a University of Massachusetts student, filed the suit last March with the Massachusetts Commission Against Diserimination after losing her job at Fitzwilly's. Within the last month the UMass Legal Services Office (LSO) took the case over from the commission to speed up the legal process. Last Friday, Attorney Ruth Diaz from the LSO who is representing Domonique, held a press conference to announce the suit.

In a press release, Kirwood, Hayes and Sullivan said, "The ex-employee has issued a press-release and her attorneys conducted a press conference at the University of Massachusetts to publicize the allegations in the complaint even before the court papers were served on all the defendants."

Diaz said copies of the suit were served to two of the three defendants at the time of the press conference. Richard Burbine, manager at the time of Domonique's employment and the man Domonique said subjected her to a hostile working environment when she refused his advances, did not receive a copy of the suit.

"It's not that we didn't try to serve him. We just could not get it served in time," said Diaz.

The press release quotes Sullivan as saying, "It is the lowest form of legal dirty pool to drag the name of any individual or business down into the gutter on unfounded, untried and unproven allegations of sex harassment. The very heart of our judicial process, a presumption of innocence, is ripped out by the trial-by-press-conference tactic."

A need to let the UMass community know there is "something they can do" was one of the reasons why the LSO held the press conference, Diaz said.

"This office represents 25,000 students. We feel the issue of sexual harassment is important for students and we wanted to educate the public that sexual harassment is a form of sexual diserimination. We wanted students and other people to know there is something they can do about it," said Diaz.

Bottle Bill accorded positive reception by UMass students

By ANNE MCCRORY
Collegian Correspondent

A poll conducted on campus yesterday showed a majority of University of Massachusetts students favor the Bottle Bill.

Over 90 percent of the students interviewed supported the bill, which would require a deposit on all bottles and cans. Their reasoning included both ecological and economic factors.

The Bottle Bill was passed last fall by both houses of the Massachusetts legislature, overriding Governor Edward J. King's veto. A referendum question asking voters to repeal the bill before it takes effect will be on the Nov. 2 election ballot.

Students seemed to show an overall understanding of the different issues involved with passage of the bill.

"If people return bottles they won't litter as much," said Leslie Greene, 18, a computer and information science major.

"(Recycling) keeps the environment clean and uses up less materials," agreed Sue Katz, 20, a College of Arts and Sciences (CAS) major.

Lee Fliderman, 18, a Business major, favors the bill "because you can recycle bottles and save money in the future."

Another student cited public awareness and the creation of jobs as benefits of the bill.

"The public needs to be more active in fighting pollution," said Kathy Rodenhizer, 20, an environmental science major.

Cleanliness is the Bottle Bill's main advantage, said David Centrella, 19, a CAS major. "I'm against the idea of breaking bottles everywhere — it'll clean the place up," he said.

"(The Bottle Law) keeps a lot of debris off the streets — you don't see cans and broken bottles," confirmed Sheila Mead, 19, a Business major from Connecticut. The Bottle Bill is the Bottle Law in that state.

Not all students were so optimistic about the bill's effectiveness, however.

Dave Vegilante, 20, a Business major, said the Bottle Bill "is a good idea" but "it serves no purpose." People who carry drinks with them would not bother to bring them home and save them, he said.

"If you're the type who would throw bottles away you'd do it anyway," said one student who wished to remain anonymous. "(The bottles) are a hassle for the average person to bring back."

The student further identified with the working woman who goes shopping straight from work. "She won't go home to get the bottles first," she said.

Bipartisan support solidifies among electoral hopefuls for Bottle Law

By SUSAN ESSOYAN
Associated Press

BOSTON — In a rare display of unity, Republican and Democratic contenders for the state's highest offices joined forces yesterday to launch the Campaign to Save the Massachusetts Bottle Bill.

About 100 politicians and representatives of environmental and civic groups gathered at the Parker House hotel breakfast, hoping to derail efforts to repeal the legislation before it goes into force Jan. 17.

"I can tell you we have the support of the majority of the citizens in this state," said Democratic gubernatorial nominee Michael S. Dukakis, appearing with his running mate John Kerry.

Representing the Republican ticket, Leon Lombardi, nominee for lieutenant governor, called on voters not be "lulled into complacency about the bill," and to turn out in November to ensure it remains law.

The measure, requiring nickel and dime deposits on beer and carbonated soft drink containers, cleared the Legislature late last year over Gov. Edward J. King's veto. Opponents of the measure, including the Massachusetts Beverage Industry and Labor Committee, pulled together enough to put a repeal question on the ballot.

The issue has been debated in Massachusetts for a decade. In 1976, after a heavy lobbying effort by industry, voters rejected a similar bill by a margin of less than 1 percent.

He cited other surveys that show voters favoring the legislation by a two-to-one margin and said the wording of the question may have confused people.

"This is the do-or-die vote for the bottle bill in this state," said Douglas Phelps, director of the campaign, adding that he is optimistic, despite what he called an "intensive, expensive and sophisticated" effort by opponents of the bill.

Eight other states have enacted bottle bills, with New York the most recent. In New England, Vermont, Maine and Connecticut have bottle bills in effect.

"People love the bill even more after it's been in effect," Phelps said, citing a Maine referendum that overwhelmingly rejected an attempt to repeal their law two years after it went into effect.

Responding to a report of a WHDH poll released Thursday showing Massachusetts voters narrowly support repeal, Phelps said, "All that poll tells us is that we have a lot of education to make it clear to people that voting yes on Question Four supports the bottle bill."

Center endeavors to educate area residents on environment

By ELIZABETH D'AMBROSIO
Collegian Correspondent

Educating the community on issues of conservation and the environment has been the goal of the Hitchcock Center in Amherst since it first opened six years ago.

The Hitchcock Center offers courses to those interested in subjects such as natural history, forestry, animal extinction, conservation lands and rock climbing.

The membership fee is $5 for students and $10 for non-students. Fees for individual courses are $1 for members, and $2 for non-members.

The center, located on 525 South Pleasant St., is a privately owned environmental organization not affiliated with any of the "Five Colleges." It is open to the community of Amherst and students from the surrounding colleges.

Along with courses, the center offers nature walks and slide shows, which are shown almost regularly every other Thursday. Members of the center who have experience on certain subjects are encouraged to present information to the class.

There are also resource rooms available to members any time the center is open.

Cliff Reed, the public program coordinator, said the schedule for courses and events varies. A quarterly paper, newsletters, schedules, and a calendar are mailed to members to keep them updated on upcoming events, Reed said.

"The program has been very successful in the past. We get a lot of responses from many, although we don't have as much response from students as we would like," he said.

Reed said those persons interested in the Hitchcock Center should stop in or write to the center, sending their name, address and a check for $5.

"We are always glad to have student participation for things going on in the center," he said.

The center is open 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday, and 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. on Saturday.

Campus group strives for objective of reproductive freedom

By MARY BALDWIN
Collegian Correspondent

Anti-choice abortion legislation is the top priority this year for the Committee for Equal Rights and Reproductive Freedom (CERRF), a student-run organization at the University of Massachusetts.

The main goal of CERRF is to get the campus informed about issues of reproductive rights and getting people organized so they know what is going on, because reproductive rights affect everybody, men and women," said Jane Zbyszynski, a psychology major and a core member of CERRF since last fall.

Made up of ten core members, both men and women, CERRF was formed by the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) Women's Issues Team and the Radical Student Union (RSU) in the fall of 1980 in response to the increased attacks on reproductive rights. Although CERRF is a member of the Reproductive Rights National Network, it tries to stay within the campus community.

A major victory for CERRF came Sept. 15 when the Senate voted 47-46 in favor of tabling Senator Helms' anti-abortion rider.

The Helms rider is very similar to the Human Life Amendment, which states that no unborn person should be denied life by any person and that life begins at conception. It would give a fertilized egg the rights of a person under the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution.

In order to help prevent the passage of the Helms rider, Zbyszynski said, "CERRF repeatedly called Massachusetts' Senators Kennedy and Tsongas. In the past year we wrote several hundred letters and petitions opposing any and all anti-choice legislation that goes through the Senate." CERRF deals mostly with in-state legislators, but Zbyszynski said, "We don't limit ourselves to that."

Teresa Kolrsh, a legal studies major who has been a core member of CERRF for one year, said, "Petitioning against legislation in dorms to performing skits are techniques used by CERRF to make people aware of attacks on abortion and forced sterilization. CERRF also came together to do advocacy work."

In addition to fighting anti-abortion legislation and forced sterilization, CERRF supports sex education in schools, struggles of lesbians and gay men and equal rights for women.

Future plans for CERRF include "skits and plays for the campus community, more petitioning of anti-choice legislation, and wider education and outreach through the dispersement of pamphlets," Zbyszynski said.

Lobbying and finding pro-choice legislatures to vote for in the November elections is the most important item on CERRF's agenda for now, she said.

Tilde Turchinetz, an advocate for SCERA and a core group member of CERRF, said, "I got involved with CERRF because of personal feelings. The group works well together and it feels good to do something that helps to change things."

For more information about CERRF, call or visit the SCERA Women's Issues Team Office.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Why must vice be so terribly nice?

What's wrong with vice? There are certainly worse things: vandalism, murder and stupidity, to name just a few. So why all the fuss about vice? The world is full of people excessively concerned with sex, drunken laughter, and a thousand and one of life's other sordid little pleasures. Well, I think vice has been forced to live with its bad reputation for much too long now.

Mary Beth Hebert

You can't escape it; vice is everywhere. No matter where you are, there is always something around to do that you shouldn't be doing. From the liquor cabinet in the house that you used to babysit in, to that dime bag of pot your roommate left in the living room, vice seems to turn up everywhere. Even the most innocent of environments hold vice's temptation. Take Sunday dinner at Grandma's for example. You are seated at the table under the watchful stare of the entire family. The meal passes on interminably and suddenly, through your misery, you realize that vice has got you once again. How could you know that somewhere between the conversation about Aunt Edna's last kidney operation and the shouting match about the 76ers the vice of gluttony would rear its gapping mouth? Vice isn't bad; in this case, it's a creative form of escapism.

Vice is easy to do. One swallow, one puff, one little feel in the wrong place, and vice gets you again. If swearing is a vice, then what are we supposed to use for expletives? Now, I can't spell at all. As a matter of fact, I just used the dictionary to find out how to spell "expletive". Know what words they use as examples? "Damn" and "My goodness". When you stub your toe on a chair, what comes to mind first? The swear words of course. A good blue streak of curses will always prove to be a much more effective emotional catharsis than two weeks of "My goodness"s.

The very best part about vice however, is that its fun. Haven't you ever noticed how all the things that seem to be the most fun are considered vices? What sort of system of justice is that? Sure you can stick to the speed limit, but doesn't the fun come when you hit that open stretch of road that you know no one else will be on? And I guess it's possible to go through life without one naughty, indulgent binge but why should you? Those who've already been on one of these trips know that some of life's fondest memories come from the times we got away with doing something a little shady.

So what's wrong with vice? It's available, easy to do, and fun; three important criteria for any activity. My advice? Try vice...it's nice.

Mary Beth Hebert is a Collegian columnist who perhaps indulged in a bit too much vice before writing this.

Freedom for all depends on an immediate peace in Beirut

To the Editor:

"Reagan orders Marines to Beirut," — this was splashed across the front page of the Globe. It greeted me as I opened my door this morning.

800 young men being sent back to a land overwhelmed in blood and violence. They will be part of a peace keeping force in a nation that has not known peace for two thousand years. These Marines will be combined with troops from France and Italy.

Most of these men are in their late teens or early twenties, and probably anxious at the return to this strange, distant land. Excitement with a taste of fear. Will a cease-fire hold? Or will someone fire that fatal first shot?

They are being sent to bring a halt to the slaughter which is taking place in Lebanon. These 800 men represent our answer to an outcry for humanity and compassion.

Why should we take it upon ourselves to become involved in a dispute that has its roots in the beginning of history? The reason is that the massacre that took place last weekend is an outrage against us all! When the U.S. agreed to help with the evacuation of the PLO from Beirut we guaranteed safety for their families, but it appears as though we failed miserably.

Maybe it's time we made a stand in the Middle East, maybe we should demand sanity and reason. The Marines that have been committed to act as peacemakers could be the last chance for another decade to establish a foothold for peace.

So as you lay down you head tonight, after cramming for that Econ quiz say a silent prayer for a young man standing in a hot, sandy land, thousands of miles away from home. For he represents all that we as a free nation stand for.

The bottle bill is unAmerican

The bottle bill referendum on the upcoming general election ballot has been called the most hotly debated consumer and environmental issue in Massachusetts. I don't see what the big deal is — I'm against it, and I'll tell you why.

For one thing, if the bottle bill is allowed to go into effect in January, UMass would be a much cleaner place. That kind of drudgery we don't need. Why, one of my fondest memories of my years in Southwest was trudging through the mounds of broken bottles on those famous "mornings-after." I wouldn't want to take this privilege away from my younger colleagues.

Josh Meyer

In states with bottle bill laws, there has been an average of 66 percent to 80 percent less beverage container litter, and up to 50 percent less total litter. If the bottle bill is allowed to pass, we'd save $4.5 million in waste disposal and at least $1.7 million in litter clean-up costs, according to Gov. King's Task Force on Deposit Regulation. Yet with all this positive information, King vetoed the bill back in 1979. I'll bet he knows something that we don't, the crafty old buzzard!

Right now, only 5 percent of the 250 million cans and bottles are recycled yearly in Massachusetts. With the bottle bill, as much as 90 percent would be recycled. We would not be able to spend as much money importing expensive, finite resources to make aluminum and glass as we have been recently. This would surely ruin our reputation as a Big Spender and international distributor of wealth. We Americans would have to keep the money for ourselves, or give it away to some unpatriotic cause like economic aid to the Third World.

With the bottle bill, two to three thousand more jobs would be available in Massachusetts, forcing that many people off welfare and back on the payroll. Think of the hardship this would cause these poor people! And what about those old men who pick up the litter at UMass? I'll tell you — they'd have to leave the exciting field of sanitation engineering, and may even be forced into working at a recycling plant. This is something they'd absolutely abhor, especially in those brisk winter months.

An EPA study in 1976 predicted that returnable beverages are 25 to 40 percent cheaper than disposables. Even Gov. King predicted the price would drop by at least five percent. My God! We all know what would happen if the price of a six-pack dropped that much. Students wouldn't be able to control themselves, and our reputation as a fine, upstanding example of higher education would be tarnished because people would be drunk all the time.

Believe me, I've seen how the bottle bill works. It is a most insidious influence on the youth culture of today. In my freshman year at the University of Vermont (where a bottle bill has been in effect since 1972), I had to stand by and watch two close friends scurry around after an outdoor concert and collect $75 worth of cans and bottles. They then used this immorally obtained money to buy illicit recreational party stimulants for that night's activities. It was just disgusting.

Unfortunately, some people support this heinous bill. Public opinion polls in other bottle bill states have shown overwhelming support for it. So far, nine states have passed it, and none have repealed it. This proves my theory that there are significant communist elements in our society. Obviously these people are trying to subvert the American capitalist infrastructure by conserving instead of wasting, and saving rather than spending. It's just not the American way.

So you see, the bottle bill must be stopped. Not only does it drastically reduce litter and create jobs, but the amount of energy saved in one year would be enough to run the state of New Hampshire for a year. And who cares about New Hampshire?

And worst of all, if the bill is passed people in Kennedy Tower won't have the thrill of taking showers in their sneakers anymore.

(The bottle bill is referendum question #4, and has no relationship to any choice of candidates. Vote yes to keep the bill intact.)

Altered Images; pure pop virtuoso

PINKY BLUE (Epic)
Altered Images

By DOUGLAS MUISE
Collegian Staff

OK, listen up! What's this summer's best Pop record? "Haircut 100's Pelican West," you say. Nope — too cute; besides they're old hat by now. "Alright, how about Flock of Seagulls' debut?" you reply, undaunted. Na-a-a, "I Ran" still moves but the rest of the LP is nothing more than synthesized swill. "Well surely ABC's Lexicon of Love," you announce indignantly. Are you kidding? Too much disco; I hate disco.

"Well, what the hell do you like anyway?" you demand with a sneer.

My choice...wait for it...is Britains' own charmingly endearsome Altered Images and their newest release Pinky Blue. That's right, Altered Images. Now this is Pop in its purest, most virtuous state: excitable, witty, keenly crafted, and consistently fresh. It's even danceable!

Every song goes down like a Steve Herrill's strawberry malted: smooth, sweet, and without the slightest hint of an after taste. And all of the band members are so cool. Clare Grogan's voice is like that of a small child — it evokes a sensation of superlative sweetness and vulnerability, yet it's got a rough constraining edge that keeps everything in order. Initially, it sounds as if she's been gargling with liquid helium her voice is so high pitched — but then it sort of creeps up your spine like the warm fuzzies. Simply marvelous. Now combine this shimmering siren with a swirl of synthesizers, a sprinkling of guitars, and a keen beat and there you have it: rolicking, childish, exuberant Pop at its best!

Wallflower Order, a Women's Dance Theater Collective, is returning to the Pioneer Valley. The group will make its appearance at Mt. Holyoke College's Chapin Auditorium Friday, October 1 at 8:00 p.m.

Established in 1975, the all-female organization has gained national acclaim through their reflective performances of changing social issues of our time. Their themes range from political perspectives of the feminist movement to issues dealing with survival of the planet and international liberation struggles.

Dancing is Wallflower's primary art form. However, the women also include theater, sign language, martial arts, music, and comedy in their performances.

Five women form the basis of the group, which is "a non-profit organization for the feminist arts." They work hard at presenting their views in a personal and highly sensitive manner while simultaneously attempting to broad their audience's political and social awareness. This non-profit, tax-exempt group has toured exclusively at various benefits, rallies, colleges, and festivals in the United States as well as Canada and Latin America.

Tickets to see Wallflower Order are available at the following places: in Northampton, at Womonfyre Books, Country Comfort and Kiknos Bakery; in Amherst, at Food for Thought and For the Record; at Mt. Holyoke from the Mary Wooley Ticket Office; in Brattleboro at Maple Leaf Music; in Greenfield at World Eye Bookshop, and at the door. Prices for tickets are: $5-general, $7-contributing, and $9-supporting. The performance will be interpreted for the hearing-impaired by Viki Maureen. For more information and childcare, call 413-584-2637.

Robert Klein strikes a funny pose during his Tuesday night performance.

Klein still funny

ROBERT KLEIN
Tuesday, September 21
Fine Arts Center

By ANDREW GORDON
Collegian Staff

At around 8:30 on Tuesday night, comedian Robert Klein walked onto the Fine Arts Center stage and in a low, harsh, scratchy voice thanked the audience for coming and apologized for his laryngitis. He held the moment, then laughed and verbalized what everyone must have been thinking: "I paid two bucks to hear a guy who can't talk!?!" It was a funny moment, and Klein followed with over an hour and a half of comedy and music.

His first bit, and one of his more spontaneous, was a Gregorian chant about the Fine Arts Center. As he looked around the auditorium he began the medieval-sounding ode with ridiculous lines like, "Big building. Lots of cement. Poured by someone's brother. And the Governor's son's the architect. But there's nothing crooked about it."

He continued with a compendium of his stock routines from over the years. Unfortunately, at least 80 percent of the show can be found on his albums Mind over Matter, Growing up in the 50's and New Teeth. He drifted from one routine to another, including his classic teacher bit, dentist bit and spooky ooooh oooooohhh sound. After over 20 years of doing the same routines, however, even these sounded a little too pat. Klein also lacks the political punch he once had. In the late Sixties and early Seventies, most of his humor revolved around Nixon and Watergate and the climate of corruption that existed. Now, at 40, he sticks to the most tame of his routines. Twice during his performance he attempted to sound political; alluding to the fact that the Moral Majority isn't too good a group or that Reagan isn't too good a president. On both occasions the obviousness of what he was trying to do made the statements sink like lead.

Nevertheless, if 80 percent of the show was rehashed bits, the other 20 percent--new material and improvisation--more than made up for the fact. In particular, his comments about the National Football League strike increasing the suicide and divorce rates or the realization that his high school classmate is now porn star Gloria Leonard ("Gayle Levonsky? No way!") combined the humor his patter with the outrageousness of his delivery. A Public Broadcasting Service takeoff, an update of his "young people's guide to the opera" was also a standout. He played a recorder and danced about the stage, accompanied by perfect birdcalls from the audience.

Klein showed that he hasn't lost his quickness during interplay with the audience. At one point, when Klein was trying to remember an Ed Sullinan performer, someone yelled Ed Jockoman. Unable to place the name, he asked who it was. A second person yelled "my mother." Without missing a beat, Klein demanded to know why the first person was talking about the second's mother. He then "became" Mrs. Jockoman, home ironing and talking about her son Billy, "who's over at the Robert Klein concert."

Trailers by Andy Gordon

Tommy Lee Wallace, the man who edited Halloween, The Fog and John Carpenter films, is fast becoming the man to watch on the shock-horror circuit. Wallace has written and directed Halloween III: The Season of the Witch which, like George Romero's new flick Creepshow, will open on Halloween. Halloween III will not star Jaime Lee Curtis (Stacey Nelkin stars) and does not feature "The Shape," our favorite slasher. Instead, the film centers around a crazy old toymaker, who has created three Halloween masks that are quickly bought-up by children around the country thanks to a big advertising campaign. As it turns out, the toymaker has implanted the masks with possessed microchips taken from a slab of stonehenge. These microchips program the youngsters to act out some dastardly tricks and treats.

Sound stupid? Wallace has also written Amityville: The Possession, which is even stupider. The sequel to The Amityville Horror has a different family moving into the house and getting similarly possessed. Burt Young plays the father, whose wife keeps hanging out in the cellar and whose children start having sex with each other. Also, the house keeps turning on its side and all the crucifixes disappear. Wallace sounds like he had a bad childhood.

Alone in the Dark, also opening soon, should be a horrible treat. The story involves a New York City blackout, which turns off the security devices at a state mental hospital. Three criminally dangerous inmates escape and work together to track down a former guard. It may sound like another typical gore fest, but not when you consider who the hatchet wielding nut-jobs are being played by: Martin Landau, Jack Palance and Erland Van Lid, the De Jeude (the huge bald guy from Stir Crazy and Popeye). Should be an interesting picture.

Magician Doug Henning will play the lead in the musical production of Merlin, based on the magician of Arthurian legend. Merlin will first be presented as a Broadway show (it's scheduled to open at the Alvin on December 19) and then will be filmed by Columbia pictures for a 1984 release.

Golan-Globus Productions has released a list of 1982/83 productions. Among the most interesting: The House of Long Shadows starring Vincent Price, Christopher Lee, Peter Cushing and John Carradine; 10 to Midnight with Charles Bronson; Sean Connery and Miles O'Keefe in Sword of the Valiant; and Lou Ferrigno (now filming Hercules) as the lead in The Seven Magnificent Gladiators.

While Peter Bogdanovich, director of They All Laughed, Dorothy Stratten's last film, prepares a biography of the murdered Playboy playmate, Bob Fosse is preparing his film bio. Mariel Hemmingway will play Stratten, whose acting career was cut short by her jealous husband. Eric Roberts plays the husband and Cliff Robertson makes an appearance as Hugh Hefner. The name of the film is Star 80.

The late Dorothy Stratten as she appeared in They All Laughed.

Answer to last week's question: Sean Penn, who was the hilarious valley boy Spicoli in Fast Times at Ridgemont High, played Timothy Hutton's caustic cadet roommate in Taps.

A fascinating Mephisto

MEPHISTO
Sept. 22 - Oct. 5
Pleasant St. Theater

By ELAINE SENAY
Collegian Correspondent

Mephisto is an absorbing portrayal of a man manipulated by the political scene of his day.

The story centers around Hendrik Hofgen (played by Klaus Grandauer), a frustrated provincial actor. He seeks a way both socially and artistically to further his career. Grandeur portrays Hofgen's ambitious aims with an energy that seems to fill the entire screen.

By marrying into a wealthy family, he is able to begin a new life in Berlin. Soon Hofgen makes a name for himself in the theater. Paralleling Hofgen's rise to popularity is the growth of Fascism in Germany. Its influence slowly closes in on all aspects of German society including the State theater where Hofgen performs.

By deceiving himself into believing that Fascism can't touch the world of art, Hofgen doesn't see how it changes him and the way he performs. Both his wife Barbara and his mistress Juliette warn him of the dangerous effect the Nazi party will have on German society and on Hofgen himself.

This change is presented in the way Hofgen portrays the role of Mephisto in Goethe's Faust. When Hofgen becomes the favorite of Goering, he unknowingly becomes a puppet of the Nazis. He loses all sense of reality as a result. Hofgen becomes like Mephisto who is a villainous and diabolical character. He is used in this disguise to assure Germany and the world that a Fascist regime is not a dictatorship.

Hofgen is an instrument by which Goering can give Fascism a good name. By his cooperation with Goering, Hofgen can no longer make a distinction between his stage life and his personal life. The Nazi party and their whole ideology become his entire life.

When Hofgen begins to lose his friends who object to the Fascist government, he begins to realize his own role in all of Goering's propaganda. Hofgen becomes a truly pathetic figure who cannot be saved. As a result, Hofgen finally becomes a true part of the political party that has molded him into its own image.

The performances in Mephisto are brilliant. Klaus Maria Grandauer is fascinating as Hofgen, capturing the most subtle aspects of this complex man. His wife, played by Kristina Janda who is best remembered in Man of Iron, is a calm reminder of Hofgen's life before he went to Berlin.

Mephisto is a film that will make audiences wonder how the Nazi party changed the thinking of an entire generation. Director Istvan Szabo projects this by focusing on one individual: Hofgen. This is a movie that will fascinate and disturb and it is well worth seeing.

Klaus Maria Grandauer and Krystyna Janda in Mephisto, 1982 Oscar winner for Best Foreign Film.

Lt. Dave Jankowski of the Amherst Police Department signs an application for an alcohol identification card for a University of Massachusetts student yesterday in the Blue Wall. The card, which is then purchased at the Registry of Motor Vehicles, is required for persons not having a Massachusetts driver's license who wish to purchase alcoholic beverages. Jankowski, calling the service "a convenience for students," said he and Lt. Michael Grabiec and Chief Robert Joyce of the UMass Police Department signed more than 100 applications in two hours yesterday, and planned to return again later this semester.

Gerald Souza, who teaches a course on prisons at the University of Massachusetts, offered himself as an example that those convicted of a capital crime can be rehabilitated and returned to society. Souza, 40, spent 18 years in prison for taking part in an armed robbery in which a man was killed, before having his sentence commuted by King in 1981.

"If rehabilitation is such a farce, what am I doing here after being commuted by Governor King? Rehabilitation exists," Souza said.

Citing examples of ghastly violent crimes, Curran, a former prosecutor in the Suffolk County District Attorney's Office, said there is a need for the death penalty to deter violent crimes. he said society has become "cheapened" and murder has risen by 170 percent in the past several years.

"There are some kinds of murderers — the cold-blooded calculated murderer — who will be detered by capital punishment. It's society's way to defend itself and it is necessary for a civilized society to survive," Curran said.

Collins, a member of the Committee Against the Restoration of the Death Penalty in Massachusetts, said his first public speech, which was delivered in a rhetoric class during his freshman year at UMass, was against the death penalty. Capital punishment is a political issue which surfaces each election year, he said.

★rally

Massachusetts next semester, was wearing a scarf to cover his face. He explained he did not want to have his picture taken.

Paul Kasman, 18, a political science major at UMass led a group called Students Against Political Distortion. The impromptu group was formed after Monday's rally, he said, and came to the rally to make sure events in the Middle East were "reported fairly."

"It is clear from the signs they (the pro-Palestinians) are carrying --swastikas and 'Begin is a Nazi' -- they're not here to protest the killing of the Palestinians," he said. "They are here to protest the state of Israel."

Many students walking by became involved in the demonstration.

"They are all saying 'long live Palestine and long live Israel'," said Andy Hagerty, 29, a lab technician. "Nobody is saying long live both. And that kind of rhetoric is going to get us killed."

Shari Sorkin a junior from Boston, said, "Israel is fighting for survival."

David Moses, a junior business major from East Longmeadow, said, "I'm not directly involved but I side with the PLO. I think they should get their land back. It's just too bad it turned into an argument."

BC emerges as a national powerhouse

By DAN LEBERFELD
Collegian Correspondent

New England finally has itself legitimate football powerhouse and it is not the Patriots. It is the high flying Eagles from Chestnut Hill also know as Boston College. Last Saturday they stunned the college football world by tying the defending national champions, the Clemson Tigers 17-17.

The team is lead by quarterback Doug Flutie, a crazy-legged bundle of excitement who scrambles through wall to wall tacklers. Besides being a fearless scrambler, Flutie can also pass the ball quite effectively. He is currently one of the top five quarterbacks in passing yards in the nation with over 600 yards in the air over the first two games.

On defense, B.C. is lead by 6'6", 275 pound defensive tackle Junior Poles, who has dominated the field with his great agility for a man his size.

The team's tight end Rich Shrigley is also a star basketball player. As a senior last year Shrigley (a 6'5" forward) was a key reason for the Boston College basketball team advancing to the final eight of the NCAA tourney. Under NCAA rules he has one year of football eligibility left, so while he goes to BC graduate school he stars on the football team.

The Eagles face a tough schedule ahead of them including Division 1 powers Navy, West Virginia, Penn State, and Syracuse. After these games, they will be paying a visit to Amherst to take on the Minutemen.

This will be a good opportunity for local football fans to see a legitimate Division 1 football program up there with the likes of Nebraska and Notre Dame.

In the last 20 years certain college football programs have turned into assembly lines for turning out professional players at particular positions. Players that want to become professional quarterbacks should go to Stanford (Jim Plunkett - L.A. Raiders, Guy Benjamin - S.F. 49ers, Steve Dils - Minnesota Vikings, and Turk Shoenert - Cincinnati Bengals) or Purdue (Gary Danielson) Detroit Lions, Mike Phipps - Chicago Bears, Mark Hermann - Denver Broncos, and Bob Griese - Miami Dolphins - retired.

The schools that aspiring defensive backs should attend are San Diego State (Joe Lavender - Washington Redskins, Herman Edwards - Philadelphia Eagles, Monte Jackson - L.A. Raiders, Terry Jackson - N.Y. Giants, Willie Buchanon - San Diego Chargers, Reuben Henderson - Chicago Bears, and Saladin Martin - S.F. 49ers) or the University of Colorado (Mike Davis and Odis McKinney - L.A. Raiders, Mark Haynes - N.Y. Giants, Jesse Johnson - N.Y. Jets, Mike Spivey - New Orleans Saints, Rod Perry - L.A. Rams, Mike Kozlowski - Miami Dolphins, and Mike McKoy - Green Bay Packers.

Last Saturday's game between Stanford University and San Jose State University was more than just a match of two cross state rivals. The quarterback for Stanford is senior All-American John Elway and the coach of San Jose State is his dad Jack Elway. The junior Elway had chosen Stanford over San Jose State four years earlier and this was the first match between the schools since then.

Commentary

The week before that the Eagles ruined the debut of multi-million dollar Texas A and M coach Jackie Sherrill by destroying his #15 ranked Aggies 38-16.

For their exploits, the UPI poll has ranked this Massachusetts school as the 19th best team in their weekly poll of college football teams.

When you get paid back with interest like this, it sort of makes you wish he'd borrow things more often.

Tonight, let it be Löwenbräu.

Some date you are! I spend the whole night watching you study while everyone else is out having fun. If you had used Cliffs Notes instead, you would have more time for me. They help you understand what you read and they give a great review. Get Cliffs Notes at the bookstore. Wise up! Don't bother calling me tonight. I'll be at the submarine races with Brian.

So turn out the light, Juliet, and come out with me to the bookstore for Cliffs Notes.

BU ballplayer death probed

BOSTON (AP) — A Boston University basketball player who collapsed and died on the court last week may have been suffering from a rare heart ailment, a doctor says.

Arturo Brown, captain-elect of BU's varsity basketball, died last Friday during an informal basketball game at the Harold P. Case Athletic Center.

Dr. Jeff Isner of Tufts-New England Medical Center, who analyzed microscopic slides of Brown's heart tissue, said Brown may have had a condition known as idiopathic hypertrophiccardiomyopathy, or IHSS.

Brown, 21, of New York City, had played basketball at the university for three years and was a senior in the School of Management.

"There were many features in Brown's heart tissue to suggest IHSS," Isner said. "Hearts tend to be larger than normal in IHSS patients, but Arturo's weighed only 495 grams, 95 more than the average man's heart. When translated to his height and the fact he was an athlete, it isn't extreme.

"But Arturo did have a small area of heart muscle that had died. In the technical sense, he had a prior heart attack, which is often found in IHSS victims. There is no reason to believe that Arturo Brown died from typical heart disease."

A few days before his death, Brown passed out while jogging.

"The loss of viable muscle in one area indicates that Brown suffered a mild attack, and sudden loss of consciousness is one characteristic of IHSS," the doctor said.

Smith downs UM netwomen 6-3

By JILL LANG
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's tennis team lost to Smith College yesterday afternoon on the Boyden Courts by a score of 6-3.

UMass first singles player, Elizabeth Sullivan, took the first match of the afternoon, winning 6-2, 6-4.

"Despite the wind out there, I was pleased with the way I played," said Sullivan.

Second singles player Chris Frazier lost in two sets, 6-3, 7-6, while Patricia Sullivan was defeated 6-1, 6-3 at the third singles spot.

Laura Kaufma, the UMass fourth singles player, also lost in straight sets, with scores of 6-2 6-1.

The Minutewomen gained some lost ground, however, when Karen Orlowski won at fifth singles, 7-5, 6-3.

Sixth singles player Joyce Girasella had little trouble with her Smith opponent, as she breezed with scores of 6-0, 6-1.

The hopes for a UMass victory were dashed when Smith swept all three of the doubles matches.

First doubles team of Ariel Fowler and Diana Biagioli lost 6-3, 6-1.

In what could have been billed as the heartbreaker of the afternoon, the second doubles team of Maureen Hamlon and Annmarie McKertich extended their opponents to three sets in their 3-6, 6-3, 3-6 loss.

Jillian Mesgos and Tina Eglin, at the third doubles spot, lost in straight sets, 6-2, 6-4.

The netwomen travel to Boston College tomorrow for a match at 1 p.m. Their next home match will be next Thursday, against the University of New Hampshire.

Cabletelevision offers sports on top of sports

By ELLIOT KALB
Collegian Staff

It's hard to be a SERIOUS sports fan in Amherst. Everything is against you. Thenearest professional baseball, football, or basketball team is 90 miles away in Boston, the morning newspaper does not give the late scores from the West Coast until 2 days after the game has been played and the politics of the area does not look favorably on real sports like football.

Thank God for cable television. And thank the Amherst Cable Television Committee for their selection of channels recently brought into the Amherst area.

ESPN, USA, WTBS, WGN and WPIX became available to Amherst cable television subscribers last July 1, offering zillions and zillions of live and taped coverage of sporting events.

ESPN, for those who have been living on Mars, is a cable television station that programs 24 hours a day of sports. They have excellent coverage of college basketball, Canadian football, and NHL hockey.

USA Cable is more selective about its sports programming, confining it to evening hours. Track-and-field events, major league baseball games, NBA basketball games this season and sports talk shows regularly appear on USA.

CNN, or Cable News Network, owned by Ted Turner, also is on the Amherst cable and has a fine group of sportscasters.

It is now possible to turn on the television at 3 a.m. and catch the tape of the Arizona State-Houston football game. Insomniac sports fans now have an alternative to watching old Fred McMurray movies on Channel 40. No one has a right to call themselves a sports fan if they do not regularly watch ESPN's hour-long sportscast, "SportsCenter."

This past Wednesday night USA featured the game between the California Angels and the Kansas City Royals live! Knowing they have rights to NBA basketball games makes it easier for me to sleep at night, too.

WGN from Chicago brings in White Sox games, WPIX from New York brings in the Yankees, WTBS from Atlanta brings in the Braves and the NBA's Atlanta Hawks, as well as college football games and possible, all-star professional NFL strikers All-Star games.

All this for a mere $10.50 a month after installation.

The Amherst Cable Television Committee is made up of five people, including Tim Ashwell from WTTT in Amherst and John Volpe (two SERIOUS sports fans). After surveying Amherst's 4500 cable subscribers, and using their own instincts (MORE GAMES! MORE GAMES!), Amherst rebuilt much of their cable system to accommodate the 20 channels it was cleared to bring in by July 1, 1982, based on the 1978 cable contract.

WOR-TV from New York (Channel 9) is not on the "God Box" due to technical reasons. Since WOR carries Knicks and Nets basketball games, and Rangers and Islanders hockey games, this is a clear loss.

Cable television offers a wealth of sports for the true connoisseur. ESPN alone offers 24 hours a day of sports, including many live events. Televised sports has become an addicting drug. It is now possible to eat, sleep, and study in front of a football game, literally at all times of the day.

Long live Ted Turner. It is now possible to be a SERIOUS sports fan in Amherst.

Minutemen set for clash with Crimson

By BILLY SHEA
Collegian Staff

Before you cash your payroll check and buy the weekend beers and other assorted weekend treats consider a deal being offered by the Northeast Area Government this weekend.

For just $13.50 the NEAG will take you away from ,the drudgery of another weekend of bouncing around Amherst looking for something to do and put you in Boston for a day that will include a ticket to watch the UMass football team bang heads with the Harvard Crimson.

The bus will leave the Campus Center Circle at 10 a.m. Saturday and return to Amherst at 7:00 p.m. thus leaving plenty of time to check out what's happening in Boston.

The main attraction of the day, of course, is the football game, which pits the 1-1 Minutemen against the undefeated (1-0) Crimson.

Harvard opened up the season with a convincing 27-14 victory over Ivy League opponent Columbia last week. This week, however they face a questionable quarterback situation.

Seniors Ron Cuccia and Doug Allard were splitting the quarterback duties last week for Harvard when Cuccia went down in the second quarter with a rib injury. Allard stepped in and moved the Crimson well so Harvard coach Joe Restic has a tough decision to make.

When the air attack isn't moving Harvard, the ball goes to Scott McCabe (22 carries 83 yards) and Jim McGugan who had two touchdowns against Columbia, including a 37 yard touchdown run.

Clearing holes for McCabe and McGugan will be All-Ivy selections Greg Brown and Mike Corbat who should test the temporarily revamped Massachusetts defensive crew.

As far as the Minutemen are concerned, coach Bob Pickett is looking for the Minutemen to make there own breaks against Harvard.

"Last week we moved the ball well but we just didn't get the ball in the endzone as much as we should have," said Pickett. "We must eliminate the big mistakes at crucial times."

While Harvard possesses exceptional strength at linebacker, Pickett is hopeful the Minutemen offense can move the ball and put some more points on the scoreboard.

"We must be more consistent on offense execution," said Pickett, "We've been our worst enemy lately."

So escape the self-imposed imprisonment of the Valley coccoon and take a ride to Boston to check out those fancy Harvard blazers, you might be glad you did.

Tickets can be obtained at the Tix office in the SUB.

Field hockey travels to Vermont on Saturday

By JILL LANG
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts field hockey team will travel to the University of Vermont Saturday morning while most UMass students are either sleeping off an adventuresome Friday night or possibly even just arriving home.

UMass coach Pam Hixon, whose team is now 2-0 at his juncture of the season, sounded almost pessimistic when discussing the Vermont team that the Minutewomen will face at 1 pm after a lengthy bus trip north.

"We should win this game, but it's really hard to say," said Hixon when questioned about the game.

For two years running, UMass has defeated the UVM stickers, but only by a 1-0 margin.

"We usually dominate all aspects of the game when we play Vermont," said Hixon. "But somehow, we have trouble scoring from the field. That will be our main objective on Saturday...to score from the field."

So far Umass has had to come up with late goals in order to gain both its wins this season.

"That's not the way we want to be playing," said co-captain Ro Tudryn. "We want to jump on the ball at the first whistle and play our best the whole way through...no matter who we are playing."

The Minutewomen will be looking to take advantage of scoring opportunities early in the game.

"If we can start the UVM game the same way we ended the B.C. game...with the same bang...then we'll be able to play our own game UVM should be no problem," said Tudryn.

According to Hixon, UVM is a fairly inconsistent team and, "they can be a threat on any given day."

For example, last season, the Minutewomen took numerous shots on goal against UVM, but only managed to score one goal. This season, though, Hixon is counting on her forward line and midfield to score from the field.

"Vermont plays a scrappy defense, and their field is tough, but there is no reason for us to lose this game," Hixon said.

Hixon has her entire squad healthy, and she plans to substitute often. The rules concerning player substitutions are less restrictive this season, and Hixon will be using this to her advantage.

"It's still early in the season, and I'm still experimenting with player combinations. We've got plenty of talent, and playing in shifts will no doubt help us find the best combinations for later in the season," Hixon said.

"The fact that Vermont has had more game experience should not be a strong factor against us either," said co-captain Carol Progulske.

Women look to be unbeaten

The University of Massachusetts women's soccer team, facing national recognition for their recent outstanding play, kick off a demanding weekend against Boston College and George Washington this Saturday when the team hosts BC at Boyden Field at 2 pm.

The team has won its first two games including a 9-0 rout over Westfield State this past Tuesday, and a 4-0 shutout of Plymouth State in Plymouth, Ma.

The freshmen have been contributing a lot offensively to the team so far as eight of the team's 13 goals have been scored by freshmen, particularly Susan Bird who has three goals.

Coach Kalekeni Banda has had a lot of praise for his defense which did a great job of stopping the offense of Plymouth and Westfield.

Sophomore Christine Taggart feels that "it's going to be a hard weekend."

The team tied BC 2-2 in overtime last year, but Taggart said, "with Boston coming here, we should beat them."

On Sunday the women will kick off against George Washington for their second game in two days with hopes of avoiding fatigue from the previous day's play.

"Coach Banda wants to hustle a lot and be ready for them," Taggart said.

UMass to clear paths for secondary schools

By ANNE CHAPMAN
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts is planning to lead a drive to improve the quality of education in secondary schools around the state.

"UMass should provide a leadership role in overcoming the crisis in secondary education," UMass President David C. Knapp said at a Faculty Senate meeting Sept. 16.

The major thrust of Knapp's plan is an attempt to improve the academic quality of future UMass students by working at the high school level.

Mark Horan, spokesman for Knapp, said Thursday Knapp is increasingly frustrated with the Massachusetts public high schools. Specifically, he said, Knapp is concerned with preparing high school students for college.

"The University will work with kids throughout their courses to ready them for college level work. Since almost all our students come from public high schools, we as a public school have an obligation to provide leadership to these schools," Horan said.

A special assistant to Knapp, Dr. Robert Schwartz, is now outlining a hypothetical plan, Horan said.

Schwartz designed the Boston Compact Project, which works with the Boston business community to give jobs to students in the Boston schools, Horan said. This project promises that 5 percent of the students will get jobs upon graduation. The major goal is to encourage more Boston students to finish high school, according to a Boston Globe article on the project.

To prepare students for college, Schwartz's plan will take a broad approach, using virtually all the resources at UMass to assist high schools in doing a better job of teaching students, Horan said.

"Schwartz plans to get all disciplines to assist in helping design curricula, work with teachers and help administer the courses. It doesn't make sense to get just the School of Education involved," Horan said.

Knapp intends to appoint a "joint education" committee which will facilitate a dialogue between the Amherst and harbor campuses of UMass. School of Education faculty members and administrators from both campuses will be involved to discuss methods of implementing a program.

Horan said another committee will look at admission procedures, in an effort to set specific standards for schools and indicate what UMass will expect from students.

"After all the cycles that public education has been through, there is a sense that high school students are confused as to what to take," said Horan.

A few UMass faculty members and administrators expressed doubts about the feasibility of such a large undertaking.

Byrd Jones, a professor at the UMass School of Education, said that UMass needs to be more organized in order to appear more open to incoming students.

Continuing education enrollment down again

By ANN CARRNS
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Division of Continuing Education, a program which University of Massachusetts President David C. Knapp said he wants to see emphasized, suffered decreased enrollment in its 1982 spring and summer sessions.

The division's Deputy Director and Financial Administrator Kevin Aiken last Thursday said although the 1982 winter session was the largest ever, the spring session showed a 10 percent decrease from 1981; the summer session enrollment dropped by 5 percent; and the trend is expected to continue this fall.

"The economy is definitely affecting us," Aiken said. "Especially our non-credit courses. Companies usually send their employess to these courses, but now they just won't pay for them."

Earlier this month, in a speech to the Faculty Senate, Knapp said he wanted to see emphasis on continuing education programs as one means of making education accessible to people.

Mark Horan, spokesman for the president, said Friday that Knapp did not have specific plans in mind for the Amherst division. Instead, the first priority will be organization of a continuing education program on the UMass Boston campus.

"Although his (Knapp's) reference to continuing education was a very general one, I do know that his remarks were directed more at a program on the UMass Boston campus rather than Amherst," Horan said.

"UMass Boston picked up a lot on continuing education classes as a result of the merger with Boston State (College), and the program is in need of organization and direction," he said.

"The Amherst campus already has a good, solid continuing education program that is very well established," Horan said. "When Joseph Duffey takes over officially as chancellor of the Amherst campus in October, he may expand on the broad goals outlined by President Knapp."

Despite the fact that the UMass Amherst Division of Continuing Education was not specifically included in Knapp's statement, Aiken said he was encouraged by the support of the program.

"Even a statement as general as that, we're glad to hear," he said. "Actually, it's encouraging to hear that they think we've got a good program."

The division has taken steps to increase enrollments, Aiken said. These measures include the combining of both credit and non-credit courses into one catalogue and the addition of more professional programs — such puter science and business management curriculum.

"We think the new combined catalogue will be very helpful," Aiken said. "Before, the credit and non-credit offerings were listed separately. Now, someone looking for a non-credit course may see one from the credited section that catches his interest, and vice versa. The computer courses should help greatly, as there is a large demand for them now."

If the economy doesn't improve, the division will be forced to cut operating costs, Aiken said.

"Right now, we are primarily a fee-funded operation," Aiken said. "We receive only 3 percent of our funds from the state, and I don't expect that to increase. The largest expense of any department is payment of staff, and if worse comes to worse we'll have to cut back."

"I don't mean directly cutting courses out," Aiken added, "but rather when vacancies occur, we just won't fill them."

One program that looks good for the coming year is the 1983 winter session, according to Credit Program Coordinator Angel Ramirez.

PLO backbone broken, says speaker

By DIANE KADZIS
Collegian Staff

Raffe Israli, professor of Middle East studies at Hebrew University and an Israeli soldier, spoke on issues surrounding the Middle East crisis to a group of about 20 at Smith College Friday.

"The backbone of the Palestine Liberation Organization was broken and it cannot be rebuilt because there is no country that will allow them in," he said.

Israli said the Israeli government, recognizing that "the PLO cannot be eradicated" as an entity, succeeded in destroying the PLO militarily.

In support of Menachem Begin, Israli said Israel should not have acted at all unless it intended to uproot the PLO completely. He also said, however, a "legitimate" criticism of Israel's actions throughout the military confrontation is that the country should not have gone into Beirut after "cleaning up" Southern Lebanon.

On the question of Israel's involvement in the Beirut massacre, Israli said his government cannot clear itself of its alleged involvement by establishing an inquiry because "that would be to lay blame on ourselves."

He said Israel "tried to mop up" members of the PLO who were still in Beirut by arresting suspects and investigating them.

"Not trying to depreciate from the horror that was done, I would say Israel went about this in the right way. The Christian Militia did it the wrong way," said Israli.

"Now the government should wash its hands so as to not get implicated in what's going on in Lebanon. Israel was there to fight the PLO — not the Palestinian people and not the Christians," he said.

Recently in Lebanon fulfilling his army duty, Israli said political discussion about the activities of the Israeli government is characterized by a "wide gamut of views." Since its outset in early June, the Israeli-Palestinian confrontation has given rise to a number of perceptions, but these varied outlooks have "allowed leeway" for the existence of opposing standpoints.

Israli said an assortment of philosophies has been the source of strength for Israel because it has enhanced a sense of democracy.

"Democracy does not only mean to exercise the will of

U.S. doubts summit meeting plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, contending that Soviet "mischiefmaking" is continuing in Poland, Afghanistan and elsewhere, has all but written off a summit meeting with Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev in the near future.

Earlier this year, U.S. and Soviet leaders expressed their interest in a summit. President Reagan invited Brezhnev to meet with him in New York in June, and the Soviet leader responded with a call for a summit in Europe in October.

But now, U.S. officials said, talk of a summit within the administration has all but vanished. The precondition set by the White House in May — improvement in Soviet behavior — has simply not developed, in the U.S. view, said the officials, who asked not to be identified.

"The situation hasn't changed a lot," said one top official. He said the Soviets were still engaged in "mischief-making in Ethiopia, Angola, Central America, Afghanistan, Poland, Vietnam and Kampuchea."

The Soviets have been relatively inactive in the Mideast, he said, because "they are in a position of weakness and irrelevance." The weapons the Soviets provided to Syria proved ineffective in operations against Israel.

As Secretary of State George P. Shultz prepared to confer with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko in New York tomorrow, the U.S. officials described the relationship between the two superpowers as static, except in the area of arms control.

The officials said there is some hope of progress toward agreements to limit nuclear weapons. But the Soviet position on medium-range missiles was described as "stiff," and parallel talks on controlling long-range missiles are still in a preliminary stage.

The Shultz-Gromyko meeting was being viewed here primarily as a get-acquainted session, according to the officials. "This is not some great event where all sorts of things are going to happen," said one official.

While the administration still wants a summit "under the right conditions," the official said, "we are not panting at the mouth."

Besides the continuing coolness between Washington and Moscow, there is serious doubt that the 75-year-old Soviet leader is well enough to meet with Reagan.

The decline in summit prospects also reflects failure of the administration to influence Soviet foreign policy, the officials said.

Forewarned climber killed by Central Park polar bear

NEW YORK — When Central Park zookeepers stopped the man from climbing into a lion cage and the elephant yard all he said was, "You have to get close to the animals." They found his body yesterday morning — in the polar bear cage.

"The bear was toying with his body, flipping it into the water, out of the water," said Officer Fred Elwick, a police spokesman.

But police and zoo officials said it was not clear whether the man was killed by the 1,200 pound bear or by a fall from the cage's spiked 12 foot fence.

Boston public school guard will testify on alleged attack

BOSTON — A black public school security guard who claims four white teenagers smashed his car window on a Boston street was scheduled to testify today following testimony by a witness who claimed the alleged attackers shouted racial epithets.

Charles Prater, 27, was to take the stand in Boston Municipal Court.

Fred Domowitz of Newton testified Friday in the trial of the four young men that while walking Aug. 8 in the Public Garden he heard a woman scream and saw a car draw up next to Prater's on Beacon Street.

"Then I saw two people simultaneously get out of the car," Domowitz testified. "The one who got out of the driver's side started saying, 'Nigger.'"

8 19th century shipwrecks discovered off of Cape Cod

CHATHAM — With the help of an airplane and a touch of high technology, a shipwreck bonanza of eight hulks has been discovered in a single weekend beneath the briny off Cape Cod, say four hobbyist scuba divers who expect little profit for their labor.

The remains of eight vessels shipwrecked in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, before the opening of the Cape Cod canal changed the course of coastal shipping, were discovered in one unusual weekend in August, William McElroy, 32, of Falmouth, disclosed yesterday.

Housing headaches easing as semester rolls

By STEVEN VOGELSANG
Collegian Correspondent

The housing crunch that plagues University of Massachusetts students each year has eased somewhat as the current semester has progressed into it's fourth week.

"There is housing available in Amherst but it is extremely expensive," said Sarah Woodbury, the off-campus housing office manager.

On campus, students are being placed in dorm rooms at a rate of six or seven per day, said Gerald Quarles, housing assignment coordinator. Almost as many students enter the housing office wanting a dorm room everyday and are added to the bottom of the list replacing the ones which have found rooms, he said.

Woodbury said there are more apartments available in Amherst now than a year age because of bedroom sharing. Most places are charging "$200 plus per bedroom," Woodbury said, forcing many students to double up.

Many of the apartment owners are advertising this fall, Woodbury said. The rent hikes are keeping many apartments empty, and owners are constantly advertising to find tenants, she said.

Woodbury said places like the Mill Hollow Apartments in Belchertown and the Northwood Apartments in Sunderland have raised their rent about 10 percent since last fall. Now, they have vacancies because of it, she said.

There are also more space available in private housing this fall than last fall, Woodbury said. Because of the present economic pattern, she believes more people are opening up rooms to students just to pay their electricity and heating bills.

There are some "good deals" out there but many are "expensive," said Woodbury. "You just have to look for the good deals," Woodbury said.

Woodbury mentioned that males looking for apartments were having a harder time finding one than females were. "Unfortunately," Woodbury said, the UMass male has been the victim of a negative stereotype. "Males will be rowdy and not clean," is a notion many people believe, Woodbury said.

The best bet for male students is a private home, Woodbury said.

Woodbury said she believes the number of evictions this year will rise because of rent problems — opening up even more available housing for the students.

Students looking for rooms on-campus are not running into unusual problems this fall, Quarles said.

At the present time, 23 students are looking for a dorm room, Quarles said. Of these 23, only two have been waiting for a room since school began, and have been given priority in the process. The other students have come into the on-campus housing office looking for a room since the first week, Quarles said.

All 23 students are male, Quarles said, since there are plenty of spaces for female students who are ready for room placement immediately.

As students withdraw from the University for various reasons during the semester the students looking for rooms will get them, Quarles said.

"In another two weeks, no one will be looking for a room," said he.

Botany programs blossoming

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Correspondent

The greenhouses at the University of Massachusetts house a paradise of rare, exotic and tropical plants from such places as New Guinea, New Caledonia, South America and India.

The greenhouses, which are maintained by the Botany department, provide students an opportunity to gain practical experience in handling, caring for and researching plants, said Ron Beckwith, who is in charge of the maintenance of the four greenhouses attached to the Morrill Science Center.

"The purpose of having the plants is not to entertain people with the beauty of them, but rather they are here for research purposes," Beckwith said.

Beckwith, who collected plants from India for UMass, said he takes great pride in the plants in the greenhouses.

"You will not see many sick plants here because we take special care of the plants," he said.

Beckwith said anyone is welcome to walk through the greenhouses and view the hundreds of plants.

"I wish more students would come in," he said. "The houses are a good place to escape from the outside world. They are a haven for students."

Operating the greenhouses are just one of the many functions of the Botany department, which Edward L. Davis, department head, said "is stronger now than 10 years ago."

Through the greenhouses, the botany department provides research data for outside industries. As a result of this practice, the Botany department has been receiving more money from the private sector than ever before, Davis said.

"Just a few years ago, we received a $125,000 grant," he said.

Davis said the floral variety of the region is one of the major advantages of the botany department.

"We are very fortunate to be located in New England," he said. "While other colleges in different areas of the country have a limited range of plants and flowers to study, New England has a wide assortment of both."

Theater Program performing better than ever so far

By SEAN CASEY
Collegian Correspondent

Inside the University of Massachusetts uniquely structured Fine Arts Center is a productive Theater department, thriving despite budget constraints.

"Each day I love theater more. All I want to do is act. That's my love, acting." That is how Jonathan Powers, 20, a UMass theater major, expressed what theater means to him.

The Fine Arts Center houses two theaters: the Frank Prentice Rand Theater and the Curtain Theater. Known as a "black box" theater, the Curtain can be manipulated to accomodate a variety of sets.

Members of the drama department will perform several plays this year. These productions will include: Vanities by Jack Heifner from Oct. 29 to Nov. 20; Dark of the Moon by Howard Richard and William Berney from Oct. 22 to Nov. 19; Ashes by David Rudkin from March 1 to 12, Comedy of Errors by William Shakespeare from Apr. 7 to 16; and Company by Stephen Sondheim from May 5 to 14.

Professor Harry Mahnken, acting chairman of the Theater department, said he believes the Fine Arts Center is an ideal setting for the theater program.

"The Fine Arts Center is a very nice building to work in and a very nice production environment. Before it was built, we were spread all over campus, but the center pulled us together and gave us a home, which is one of the best things you can give a performance organization," Mahnken said.

People in theater seem to believe they develop a closeness not found in most other programs at UMass or at any school. Ken Silverman, a senior theater major, pointed out that "students in other majors might get together to study or socialize, but theater majors work together on productions, so I think we do get closer."

"The theater's a very close-knit organization" Mahnken said. "When you're with people every night at rehearsal for a few weeks, you get to know them pretty well. I think most of the faculty have pretty close relationships with the students who work here."

Mahnken has been with the University theater department since 1962 and is one of ten faculty members currently on the staff with experience in professional theater.

Powers said he feels this staff has some "great people" on it who "definitely have a lot to teach."

Mahnken said he believes much of the success of the faculty with the students can be attributed to the students themselves.

"I would say that in a period of not too many years, I've seen a constant improvement in the performance ability of the students we've been getting," Mahnken said. "We have a large number of dedicated students who are fine people to work with."

"The interest in working in theater has increased enormously," Mahnken said. "We have more (theater) majors now than we've ever had before.

"Many theater classes just can't be enlarged," said Mahnken. "You can't overcrowd an acting class because acting classes require that each student has some time with the instructor on a one to one basis. The time for scenes to be performed and criticized has to be available," he said.

"The biggest thing an instructor can give his students is acting time," Mahnken added.

The theater department's major problem with budget cuts has been the loss of staff positions, but Mahnken said he hopes things will improve with the future.

"The Chancellor's long range plan suggests that there may be some light at the end of the tunnel for us since the theater department should be one of the departments to grow both in staff and faculty," Mahnken said.

Possible death penalty subject of colloquium

A colloquim on the possible restoration of the death penalty in Massachusetts will be taught this semester in the Southwest Residential area. Sept. 28 at the Campus Center in room 804. The film entitled, "You Have Struck A Rock!" is about the participation of women in the struggle against Apartheid in South Africa.

The Working Women's Task Force will be offering a career/life planning group, a working woman's support group and an unemployed women's support group the last week of October. All groups are free and open to women at the University and in the community.

To register for support groups or find out more information about the events scheduled this week call the Everywoman's Center at 545-0883.

Play auditions slated

The Women's Community Theater will hold auditions for Sarah Dreher's play, "Ruby Christmas," promptly at 7:30 p.m. on Tues., Sept. 28 in room 08 at the Department of Theater at the University of Massachusetts and on Thurs., Sept. 30 in rooms 109-110, in the Theater Building at Smith College. Production dates are Dec. 17, 18, 23 and 25. Contact Sarah Dreher at 256-8397 or Liz Brook at 584-0919 for more information.

"This university will not be serious about working with secondary schools in the Commonwealth until they develop alternatives for registration. It needs to be an open-ended situation for both parties involved. It is difficult to feel welcome in a place where you can't find where anything is," Jones said.

Dr. Luis Fuentes, professor of bilingual secondary education, denounced the fact that similar promises were made four years ago, with little results.

"It is a grandiose idea. This is no different from ideas that he expressed four years ago. I instituted a Boston bilingual program based on his previous outcries. I don't think he realizes that it is even there," Fuentes said.

Fuentes said there is not enough emphasis placed on bilingual programs, particularly in Boston where there is a large Spanish population. Fuentes said he feels UMass could recruit a significant number of minority groups if the bilingual issue became more central.

"I'd love to hear statements from the president advocating a bilingual program that would address the huge pluralistic population. We need to recognize the cultural diversity on this campus," Fuentes said.

The alleged lack of cooperation and participation within the School of Education concerns some professors.

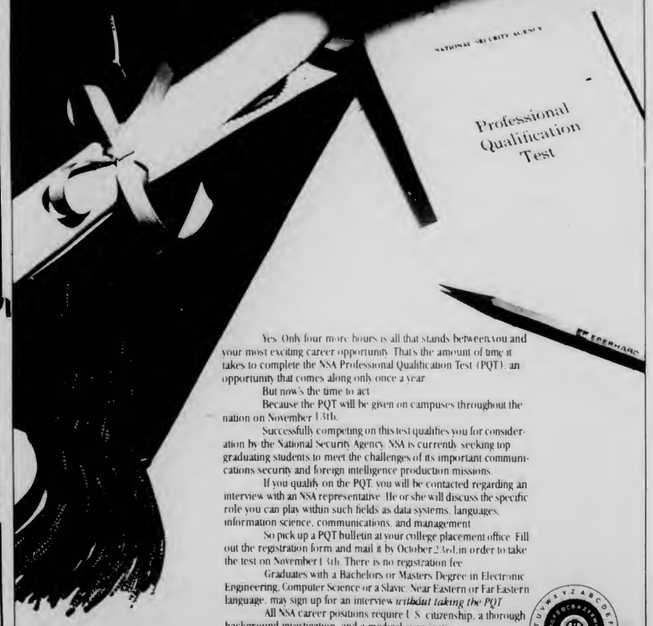
Your degree represents an investment of 5000 hours...
4 more can turn it into an exciting career.



Yes. Only four more hours is all that stands between you and your most exciting career opportunity. That's the amount of time it takes to complete the NSA Professional Qualification Test (PQT), an opportunity that comes along only once a year.

But now's the time to act.

Because the PQT will be given on campuses throughout the nation on November 13th.

Successfully competing on this test qualifies you for consideration by the National Security Agency. NSA is currently seeking top graduating students to meet the challenges of its important communications security and foreign intelligence production missions.

If you qualify on the PQT, you will be contacted regarding an interview with an NSA representative. He or she will discuss the specific role you can play within such fields as data systems, languages, information science, communications, and management.

So pick up a PQT bulletin at your college placement office. Fill out the registration form and mail it by October 23rd in order to take the test on November 13th. There is no registration fee.

Graduates with a Bachelors or Masters Degree in Electronic Engineering, Computer Science or a Slavic, Near Eastern or Far Eastern language, may sign up for an interview without taking the PQT.

All NSA career positions require U.S. citizenship, a thorough background investigation, and a medical examination.

Music and munchies plentiful at fall festival

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Correspondent

Music filled the air during Saturday's Orchard Hill Fall Festival, which began with a 2.9 mile road race, and ended that night with the movie, Oh God.

Getting neighbors together and making people aware of area resources was the goal of the fall festival, sponsored by Orchard Hill and Central Area governments, Chuck Nally, president of the Orchard Hill Area Government, said.

Nally estimated that between 600 and 700 students attended the event, including those who participated in the activities and those who just came to watch and relax.

Area student organizations held activities ranging from a pottery-throwing to a popcorn popper-raffling.

Competitions like the road race and a tug-o-war between dormitories attracted a number of participants. There was also a horseshoe throwing contest to win t-shirts from last semester's Spring Festival, and informal volleyball games bounced throughout the day.

Entertainment was provided by disc jockeys and the rock group "The Biz" in the evening.

There were plenty of hotdogs and hamburgers cooked on two large grills, which at fifty cents each, raised about $400 for the area governments.

Nally was pleased with the turnout and said he thought everyone had a good time.

"It was a great success," he said.

the majority," Israli said. "Democracy also means the right to defend the minority. Despite the natural crisis, this game of democracy works.

While distinct points of views prevail, Israli said the people of Israel have been united by a feeling that Israel has "been put under a microscope to be closely examined by the world."

"Most Israelis are unified around one thing: Israel has been mistreated by the media, not only in the United States, but around the world," said Israli.

Because events in the Middle East were not "fairly reported," Israli said the accounts offered by the press have "no relevance to reality." The result has been an "erosion of the Israeli image," he said.

The military tactics of the PLO drew the Israeli army into territories in which civilians and citizens were threatened. He said the PLO played up the fact that "innocent people" were being killed and the media responded to these maneuvers.

Hard times depressing Reaganomics

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is coming around to the politically painful truth that it cannot deliver economic prosperity, low inflation and low unemployment all at the same time.

The early promises of Reaganomics to do just that have given way to the same economic realities and lowered expectations that prior administrations also had to confront.

The tight-money, high-interest-rate polices of the Federal Reserve Board, enthusiastically endorsed by President Reagan, have produced unexpected success on the inflation front. Consumer prices are rising at the slowest pace in six years, 5.1 percent annually.

But the price has been severe: the highest unemployment and business failure rates in more than 40 years and a year-long recession that doesn't seem to want to end. Unemployment now stands at 9.8 percent and is likely to top 10 percent when new figures are released in October.

Nowadays, administration officials are acknowledging that their best hope for keeping inflation down is through a slow economic recovery that will mean little success on the unemployment front for the forseeable future.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

US — Philipine relations: hypocritical

President Reagan hailed him as a "respected voice for reason and moderation in international forums". Vice President George Bush said of him, "We love your adherence to democratic principles — and to the democratic processes."

Who is the recipient of such high praise? None other than Ferdinand E. Marcos, dictator in all but title of the Philippines, here in the United States on an official visit to extort more taxpayer dollars from our government.

Rather, by pretending that Marcos is the leader of a democracy instead of a dictatorship, Reagan tries to justify his support of this oppressive regime.

For it appears that no matter how cruel, how undemocratic a government happens to be, as long as they profess to be opposed to communism, we will support them with military and economic aid, which, more often than not, is used by the leaders to suppress their people and maintain themselves in power.

This foreign policy has two major problems. First, it is impractical. How often have we seen in recent years the fall of a dictatorship to be replaced by fiercely anti-American, even communistic rulers? The Shah in Iran, the Sandinists' regime in Nicaragua, and now El Salvador provide vivid examples of how pro-American oppressive regimes eventually fall and are invariably replaced by people who have come to associate America with oppression.

In addition, it is unethical. Even if these totalitarian governments did not have a tendency to be overthrown, do we as Americans, the people of freedom and liberty, want to support, militarily and economically, governments which deny their own people the very freedom and liberty which we treasure so much?

The suppression of other people to allegedly assure our own freedom is a burden our consciences should not have to bear. That is why Reagan's support of Marcos and his ilk is such an outrage. We should be ashamed of the Reagan Administration and apologetic toward the Filipino people.

Kevin DeLuca is a Collegian staff member

Kevin DeLuca

Amid the furer over the atrocities being committed in the Mideast, "President" Marcos' visit is going by almost unnoticed by Americans. However, it is important that we recognize the Marcos' "democracy" for what it is, a farce, and the Reagan Administration's attitude toward Marcos for what it is, hypocrisy at its highest.

Marcos' idea of democracy was to: declare martial law in 1972; Jail 1000 political opponents; to exile his main political rival, Benigne Aquine, after having imprisoned him for eight years; and to allow massacres, such as the year-old Sag-od massacre, in which 45 men, women, and children were murdered, to occur with impunity for the perpetraters, namely, army personnel.

Do these actions represent "adherence to democratic principles" in the opinion of the Reagan Administration? One would hope not, or our own democracy could be seriously threatened.

New Jewish Agenda condemns Israel for massacre

To the Editor:

We write to express outrage and deep sorrow about the massacre at the Palestinian refugee camp in Beirut. As members of the New Jewish Agenda/Khevre Chapter we are committed to the secure survival of Israel and to self-determination for the Palestinian people. We opposed the Israeli invasion of Lebanon and we cannot condone Israel's continued presence there. Israel armed the Phalangists and disarmed the Moslem refugees. Israel failed to stop the killings, and must bear the full responsibility for the massacres in the refugee camp.

We want to express solidarity with peace groups in Israel as they demonstrate their opposition to the policies of their government. As has happened in the U.S. and other countries, we believe that the political and military leadership of Israel has acted inhumanely, without the agreement of the population.

The chapters of the New Jewish Agenda call for:

— Immediate withdrawal of Israeli forces from Beirut and Lebanon.

— An end to Jewish settlements in the West Bank, and to oppression of Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza.

— Mutual recognition, by Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, of the rights to national self-determination of both Palestinian Arabs and Israeli Jews.

Random Notes

To the Editor:

About five years ago I was an undergraduate student here. I have felt guilty about some dishonest behavior which I was involved in at the time, and would like to make amends for it.

Specifically, there were times when I stole paper products from the ladies room and used them for my personal use.

I know that this occurred a long time ago, but while I used to rationalize and think that it was a socially acceptable behavior, I no longer can accept that alabi. The fact is that I took advantage of my privilege as a student here, and would now like to apologize.

I am enclosing $5.00 which I believe will cover the cost of the items I took. I'm sorry it has taken me so long to return this money which does not rightfully belong to me.

Name Withheld

Editor's Note: Last Thursday, this letter was delivered to the Buildings Operations Office in the Campus Center. Dudley Bridges, the office director, has received similar letters before and believes, "The honesty is out there, people want to be honest." Incidentally, the enclosed five dollars was put into the Buildings Operations Office fund for paper goods.

Liberal Arts end to an era?

The nineteen-sixties witnessed the rise in popularity of many things. Among them was the study of liberal arts but peaking in popularity later in the decade, the discipline itself is now in serious decline, the victim of economics and a changing student attitude. In a sense this decrease mirrors the changing American scene on various levels. Engineering, business, and the hard sciences have replaced liberal arts as the most popular subjects of study in the early nineteen-eighties.

Like other eucational revolutions, the new found popularity of the liberal arts in the nineteen-sixties reflected the times from whence it came. Though studied since the Middle Ages, liberal arts resurfaced as a popular discipline twenty years ago, at the beginning of one of the most turbulent decades in our history. It was a by-product of the values and goals embodied by that generation of students. The decade itself was characterized by paradoxes. Although marked by violence, the '60's were also a time of great compassion on the part of individuals and the government. LBJ's "Great Society" declared war on poverty. The Peace Corps and VISTA, shining examples of individual sacrifice at its best, attempted to help those unable to help themselves. At the same time, blood from the Kennedy's, Martin Luther King and Malcom X. spilled on the streets, their own brand of compassion met by assasin's bullets. The U.S. was carrying on its most unpopular war ever, with cries of dissent being met on some college campuses with tear gas and gunfire.

From this chaotic jumble of images, words and ideas emerged a new student attitude. Like the idealism which marked student efforts to change the world, these liberal arts courses taught students to question themselves and the world which surrounded them. The courses skyrocketed in popularity. As the decade progressed, more and more students chose courses which ran opposite to their parents ideals, and used the class schedule as another form of protest and dissent. Yet like the decade itself, choices changed and eventually swung back toward the "marketable" major. The new realism at the end of the sixties was symbolized in such bitter and pessimistic events as Watergate and the prolonged withdrawl of troops from Vietnam.

If the sixties were a time for sacrifice, the seventies was a time for social selfishness — the "me decade". The idealism and excitement which began with Camelot in 1960, came to an abrupt end. The war economy which had supported U.S. prosperity suddenly dried up, taking along with it a low unemployment figure and a strong growth rate. In response to this new reality students opted for degrees which reflected practical training for the stormy job market which awaited them.

Just as the economic conditions have not changed that favorably in transition from the seventies to the eighties, the popularity of liberal arts has not changed noticeably. (If anything it has become less popular). Yet, professors and even some students alike still believe in the importance of a libeal arts education — why?

Unlike other majors, the field of liberal arts allows the student the luxury of being academically adventurous, capable of exploring worlds, ideas and concepts he or she may not have been able to in a more regimented class plan. The history of the past may show them the problems of today are no different than those of Napoleon or Washington. Culturally, the student may suddenly discover that paintings and poetry are to be enjoyed by all, not just noblemen or intellectuals. This unique explorative opportunity teaches the student to rise above his or her own relatively small world, thus being able to view events in a different, more open light.

Thought processes and their development are also an important part of a liberal arts education. Critical thinking shapes the ability to observe objectively, question and form opinions. This type of lesson is not always found in more regimented types of study which demand exact answers and perfect solutions. In thinking this way the student, upon reading a book for example, can automatically begin the process of analysis, using comparitive, objective and subjective thought as basis for judging and drawing conclusions.

Sadly some still rabidly support this increase in "marketable" majors. They see this change in education as nothing more than educational Darwinism. To them liberal arts are merely an archaic left over in the new world of high-tech, computer science and electronic wizardry.

Cliff and Tosh smoke at FAC performance

Jimmy Cliff and Peter Tosh
Fine Arts Center
Thursday, September 23

By PHILLIP PLANTE
Collegian Staff

The many doubts about the rumored death of reggae music in America were put to rest by Jimmy Cliff and Peter Tosh Thursday night in the Fine Arts Center. Cliff and Tosh both gave solid performances that kept the sold out crowd on their feet for over three hours.

Beginning with a kind of Rasta hymnal, Cliff and his band demonstrated the various reggae styles Cliff has explored in the past.

On "Give The People What They Want" and "Treat The Youths Right," Cliff made his lyrics closely follow the rhythmic pulse of the music. On other songs, Cliff's voice was more at the forefront, strong and Sam Cooke-like in its ability to carry melody apart from the background rhythm of the band.

Cliff constantly strove to highlight recent material from his new album "Special." At one point in the show, album-sized cardboard squares depicting the new album were thrown to the crowd. While many of the newer tunes like "Treat The Youths Right" and "You're Special" brought favorable responses from the audience, the older songs "Many Rivers to Cross," "The Harder They Come" and "You Can Get It If You Really Want" were the ones that brought the crowd to its feet.

Drenched with sweat and constantly in motion Cliff danced with eyes closed while many in the audience did the same. On "Treat The Youths Right" an earnest call-and-response between Cliff and the crowd took place. In a slightly unreal scene, several thousand of the mostly white middle-class UMass students sang "African chant!!" "African chant!!" Such has been reggae music's ability to break down cultural barriers.

Instrumentally, Cliff's band like most modern reggae bands represented a mix in cultures. Basic African congas and rhythm instruments, African carry-overs from native Jamaican culture, complimented two versatile rhythm guitars, bass, conventional drums, and two keyboard players. The often harsh sound of some modern reggae bands, which make heavy use of synthesizers, was not part of Cliff's performance.

Thanks to an excellent sound mix, the more subtle and interesting percussion sounds of Cliff's band came through clearly.

In many ways Peter Tosh represented a more modern reggae sound than Jimmy Cliff. While Cliff's material strove for variety, Tosh's songs centered around a kind of eternal drone-like beat. With inflections with the rock guitar and metalic synthesizer sounds, Tosh's sound took in much of the American influence in Reggae music.

On "You are an African" and "Shot, Shot, Shot" the synthesizer introduced some sound and percussion effects used by new reggae bands like Black Uhuru and Steel Pulse.

Tosh, more willing to give up the spotlight to his band members, let guitarist Donald Gibson take fearsomely long guitar solos which highlighted the rock and roll element in reggae music especially on "Johnny be Good".

Inevitably a huge reefer was partaken by Tosh at the beginning of "Legalize it". Perhaps the downward trend in the use of Marajuana lessened the effect of youthful defiance in this song.

An attempt to break down cultural barriers would best describe Cliff's attempts to popularize reggae in America. When asked about the lessened popularity of reggae in America recently, Cliff, during intermission backstage, said, "Reggae music is not a fad. It is a music of the people and will endure with the people."

Nevertheless, difficulties in creating a following of reggae music throughout America have contributed to Cliff's decision to make his current U.S. tour his last one. "This is my ninth tour of the U.S. and the number nine is a number of completion." When asked why he thinks his music isn't commercially successful in America today he said, "America has a kind of arrogant mentality. Anything that isn't originally from America has a hard time being accepted."

Spikers take third in tourney

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Injuries can make or break a season and how well you can replace injured players tells you a lot about your team and its potential.

With this in mind, the University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team found out a lot about itself this past weekend by taking third place at the Central Connecticut Invitational.

It was a long and tiring day for the Minutewomen, who lost three starters due to various injuries during the course of the day and were forced to play some marathon volleyball.

The day started off on a sour note as UMass dropped their first match to American International College 15-12, 10-15, 14-16. A major factor in the lost was the fact that UMass missed (put out of bounds) 23 serves, 13 in the last game alone.

Ace spiker Patti Philbin had some problems due to a muscle pull in her foot and couldn't get the usual high jump, to block and spike, that she usually has.

So without Philbin, UMass grouped together to topple Onenta State and Sacred Heart University in straight sets. Then, UM faced the University of New Haven, the top Division II team in the East last year.

Coach Elaine Sortino inserted Philbin back into the game and Massachusetts stunned New Haven 11-15, 15-12, 15-10.

"It was the best match we have played all year," Sortino said. "It was a great match between two battlers, and a big win for us."

With the win, it created a three-way tie for first place in the qualifying pool between UMass, UNH, and AIC. The Minutewomen toppled AIC, again, (also without Philbin) and faced UNH to playdown for the top seed.

Against UNH, Patti Grant, who sets up most of the UMass spikes, sat out because she was coming down with strep throat. So Karen Gottersen came in to set and Sortino used freshmen Mary Ellen Normen and Leslie Smith to sub for Philbin, as UM toppled New Haven for the top seed, the first time UMass has done that since Sortino became coach.

In the semis, though, UM ran out of gas against Springfield College. Up 6-2 in the first game, Kirsten Smith was hurt when she slammed into Philbin's back going for the ball. It shook up UM and they dropped the game, 11-15.

In the second game, UMass had Springfield 14-9 but lost 14-16.

"It was a clear case of utter fatigue. The kids just couldn't move their legs fast enough," said Sortino. "The other pools just sat around and watched while we battled it out for our pool championship."

"Overall," Sortino said, "I was pleased with the team's effort. We played very well."

★Minutemen

UMass made the moves and showed good hustle as 12 minutes later Toni Guiliapo scored through a crowd from a corner kick by Jamie Watson for the squads' fourth and final goal.

"The forwards played a good game, much better than yesterday (against Boston College) overall," coach Banda said. "We had a new goalkeeper who did a good job. Lori Stukes played great and Jamie Watson played exceptionally well."

Banda also lauded Sharon Daggett, Kelly Hutcheons, and Christine and Ellen Taggart for their performances.

On Saturday afternoon, UMass nipped Boston College 1-0 in a very aggressive match.

The game contained good hustle for both teams and it was strong defense on the part of both teams that kept the game in check.

"Our defense has been our strength this year," said Banda.

The only score of the game came in the first half with 2:49 showing on the clock when Debbie Harackiewicz booted the ball past the left side of the BC goalkeeper. Lori Stukes assisted on the goal.

Harvard puts on airs to beat UMass

Crimson QB sets record

By BILLY SHEA
Collegian Staff

When Harvard head football coach Joe Restic was asked to take out his crystal ball for a prediction for the upcoming Harvard-UMass game he offered this comment:

"This is going to be the kind of game that is determined by a big play where somebody breaks a long one, or a couple of big plays."

Restic read this game right as his Harvard Crimson came up with most of the big plays and routed a turnover plagued University of Massachusetts football team 31-14 Saturday.

In fact, three of the four Crimson touchdowns came immediately after Minuteman turnovers and Harvard quarterback Don Allard and his team continued to score with the aid of the "big play."

Allard, (358 yards on 18 for 29 passing) who set an all-time Harvard single game passing record in the first starting role of his collegiate career, threw touchdown passes of 62 yards and 13 yards and also set up two other touchdowns with strikes of 37 yards and 71 yards.

Meanwhile, the UMass offense was stop and go most of the afternoon. In the first quarter, the Minutemen controlled the line of scrimmage and marched 45 yards on 11 plays when Tom Murray took it in from the one yard line and UMass had an early 7-0 lead.

In the second quarter, the problems started for the Minutemen. Quarterback Dean Pecevich had two passes picked off by Chris Meyers and Harvard converted both turnovers into touchdowns.

First, Allard hit split end Jim Garvey for a 62 yard scoring strike as Garvey caught the ball at the 45 yard line, shook off UMass cornerback Glen Holden and raced in untouched.

Next Allard hit tight end Peter Quartararo over the middle on a 71 yard pass play that set up one of Allard's two touchdown runs of the day and Harvard went to the locker room with a 14-7 halftime lead.

Harvard kicked a 28 yard field goal to open the second half after their longest drive of the day in the third quarter to take a 17-7 lead.

Barrett McGrath, who has been coming off knee surgery, replaced Dean Pecevich at quarterback and promptly fumbled the ball on the second play from scrimmage giving Harvard the ball on their own 21 yard line.

The Umass defense then came up with their biggest series of the game when Dan Brennan and Don Keefer sacked Allard on a key fourth and goal play from the five yard line after the Crimson had moved in from the 21.

Then, after exchanging turnovers, McGrath and wide receiver Ron Mangarelli (6 catches 117 yards) hooked up on a 69 yard touchdown pass to bring the Minutemen to striking distance at 17-14.

The Umass momentum was short lived though as Allard took his team 70 yards on seven plays with the big play being a 36 yard pass to Ed Farrell that put the ball on the one yard line setting up Allard's second touchdown run of the day.

With their backs to the wall the Minutemen were forced to throw and McGrath's pass to Kevin Jackson was picked off on the next series. Two plays later, Allard hit John O'Brien with a 13 yard touchdown pass to put the game out of reach.

Restic may have made the discovery of the season in Allard as the senior quarterback was awesome as a first time starter for the Crimson and it may have been because of the tough UMass defensive line.

Tom Murray looks for daylight during the UMass-Harvard game on Saturday. Murray and his teammates didn't get enough daylight as the Minutemen lost 31-14.

"We couldn't establish any kind of running game against them. They're tough against the run, so we had to go to the air and we were very successful," said Restic.

As far as the Minutemen are concerned coach Bob Pickett would rather not dwell on the disappointing performance of the Minutemen.

"We start our Yankee Conference schedule next week so I sure as hell would like to forget this game and get us ready for next week at Rhode Island," said the fifth-year coach.

Field hockey team puts another notch in belt

The University of Massachusetts field hockey team defeated the University of Vermont on Saturday, 3-0.

"I want you girls to jump on the ball early. Start this game like the way we ended the B.C. game...like fire," said coach Pam Hixon to her team as they prepared to leave the locker room.

UMass did just that, dominating the first half with numerous give and go plays, and bombarding UVM goalie Barbara Poulin with 17 shots on goal.

Forward Allyson Rioux opened the UMassa scoring at the 22:00 mark when she took a deflection off the pads of Poulin and pushed it into the goal.

With less than two minutes left in the half, forward Patty Smith followed up on a shot taken by Rioux and tallied the second UMass goal of the game.

The Minutewomen came out hot in the second half and dominated once again.

Rioux and Smith paired up for another goal at 16:00, when Smith took a reverse stick pass from Rioux and flicked it into the net.

The Umass defense did not allow UVM to get close enough to test Minutewoman goalie Patti Shea, as the Tigers could manage only three shots on goal for the entire game.

The Minutewomen midfield spent most of the afternoon picking off UVM passes and feeding them to forwards Tish Stevens, Sandy Kobel, Pam Moryl, Rioux and Smith.

Hixon used her substituting privileges in this game and her planning paid off. Each combination of Minutewomen on the field put together at least one series of give and go passes. More importantly, however, was the emergence of the potentially threatening combination of Smith and Rioux: these two accounted for all three goals against UVM.

"Allyson and Patti did play well. This is the kind of play we need throughout the season," said Hixon.

"This is the first time in three years we have beaten UVM by more than one goal," said Hixon, "and I am pleased with the final score. We needed to jump on the ball early, and that's what we did."

Not all wins will come as easily to the Minutewomen as this one did.

"There will be days when you can't buy a goal," said Hixon, "but even then I have confidence in my team. We have the strokes and defense to win in overtime or strokes."

The fast punch and pressure defense is a pattern Hixon wants to set for the rest of the season. Although she believes her team is improving with each game, there is still always work to be done.

Hixon also feels that the outcome of this game will definitely help the Minutewomen when they travel to Providence College on Wednesday.

Christine Taggart (white) of UMass reaches for the ball in front of a Boston College player Saturday.

Women's soccer team proves it's a contender

It was a hard but rewarding weekend for the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team as it hosted and defeated 19th ranked George Washington University on Sunday, 4-0, and 12 ranked Boston College on Saturday, 1-0, in two tough clashes between the nationally ranked.

UMass, which is sporting a number four ranking, kepts its record unblemished and moved to 4-0.

Yesterday, the team played an offensive game, according to coach Kalekeni Banda, in its win over George Washington. Christine Taggart scored two of the team's goals and had many more scoring opportunities.

Three minutes into the game Taggart put UMass ahead with a goal that slid past the left side of the George Washington goalie. Natalie Prosser assisted on the goal.

Only once in the first half was UMass goaltender Lauri Webber threatened by George Washington. Webber came out of the net to stop a player alone in front and blocked the ball with her body.

In the second half, Prosser started the scoring with a goal that trickled past the Washington goalie into the corner of the net. The goal, scored 1:53 into the half, was assisted by Paula Stashis.

Eight minutes later, Taggart scored again on a pass from Nina Holmstrom. Holstrom passed from the corner of the field and Taggart turned around and shot the ball into the net. Holmstrom got the assist.

U.N. Envoys Denounce Massacre and Seek Investigation

Peter Tosh and Jimmy Cliff Story on Page 2

Representatives from many nations at the General Assembly denounced the Israeli genocide in the West Beirut refugee camps and urged a Security Council to inquire into the massacre.

Orators of many Third World countries repeatedly insisted that Israel was responsible for the massacre and asserted that the United States was also implicated.

Zehdi Labib Terzi, the Palestine Liberation Organization observer at the United Nations was quoted as saying, "Nothing can atone for these crimes", in relation to the Yom Kippur, the Jewish Day of Atonement. "The Judeo-Nazi junta in Tel Aviv cannot atone for this crime. The Palestinians are the victims of a holocaust and genocide." He continued saying that this fulfilled "the realization of a dream and a policy by some founders of Zionism to establish a Jewish state that would eventually even eliminate all Arabs physically."

The resolution itself urges the Security Council to investigate, through the" means available" to it, the circumstances and extent of the massacre. It is written in relative restrained language and was partly put forth to avoid offending the new Lebanese Government. Although it condemns the criminal massacre of Palestinians and other civilians, it also does not blame anyone for the happenings. The term "means available" has been interpreted by many to be a loose request for action. Many delegates have opposed the form of inquiry that was proposed, that is sending their own colleagues to the massacre site, because supposedly the Beirut Government has indicated that it would not welcome this sort of proposal.

The Pakistani Foreign Minister, Sahabzada ZYaqub Khan said that " this ghastly massacre is the direct c onsequence of the Israeli invasion of Lebanon and has rightly exposed Israel to the strongest condemnation of the entire world community." The Pakistani Minister called it "ironical that the U.S. could not prevent Isroal from setting in motion a process which ended in a massacre in the Sabra and Shatila camps."

The Government of the U.S. by omission contributed to the crime said Mr. Terzi of the P.L.O. He also asserted that the massacres would not have occurred if Palestinian Arabs had been granted their right to a homeland. "For how much longer will we be prevented from exercising our rights- not contingent on any other considerations.", he stated.

The Death Penalty Debate

Both opponents and proponents of the death penalty agreed on one thing in their Thursday night debate in the Student Union Ballroom: "something is seriously wrong with our society". Neither side, however, claimed to know what that something was. The pro-death penalty speakers said that they knew how to solve it-- the death penalty. Indeed, Representative Marie Parente, (D-Milford) said that we shouldn't spend time trying to figure out what these people were thinking of, i.e., the state of their psyches at the time of the crime (or any other time). Yet her main argument, her main belief was based on second-guessing the mental state of "these people" at the time of their crime. She insisted that individuals on the brink of committing crimes, including murder, would stop and think twice if they knew that their own life might be taken. The opposition countered this argument by stating that it is the predictability of punishment, not its severity that tends to deter crime. In other words, knowing that the chances of escaping punishment are extremely slim deters people more than thinking that they might be the one person out of a million who will go to the electric chair.

The opposition to the death penalty had a fairly easy job since history and research data were both conclusively in their favor, showing that the death penalty did not deter crime. It also showed more. Dr. Bowers, a sociology professor here at UMass, has spent ten years doing research on the death penaltys' effects and realities in American society. Not only did he disclaim and refute the "expertise evidence" of Dennis Curran, aide to Govenor King, he also showed the race bias that has historically accompanied the death penalty. Representative Collins, (D-Amherst), made note of the fact that no rich person has ever been put to death under this law. While the death penalty defenders were quick to mention that out of the people executed recently only three were Black, they failed to mention that there has never been a white person put to death for the murder (no matter how heinous or how many) of a black person in this country.

The bulk of the pro-penalty case relied on its recitation of hideous cases of sadistic murder. There was a distinct attempt to make the audience feel afraid for themselves and their families by saying that "it could have been any one of us". They also used the words "like ourselves" to describe the victims. Representative Parente, of the pro-death penalty team, took it a step further by telling us what a nice man Mr. So-And-So was, and what a well-educated girl victim So-And-So was. The major point of the death penalty side was that in these extraordinary cases of murder the person tended to get out and do it again. Thus, they said this recidivism was the problem; that rehabilitation did not work; and that throwing money at the problem was an attitude of the sixties that had failed miserably.

The truth is that in Massachusetts the recidivism rate for murder is one percent, much less that for lesser crimes like burglery and theft. Parente asked the audience if they wanted to take the one percent chance. She said she did not. But she was willing to take the chance of executing "maybe two innocent people out of 20,000 guilty". Although there may be twenty thousand crimes committed or even twenty thousand murders, there will not be 20,000 guiltly people brought to court. The current pricetag for restoration of the death penalty as it now stands on the ballot is one million dollars per person. Before the opposition to the death penalty made this financial point, the advocates of the penalty told us that we needed to stop pouring our money into incarceration-rehabilitation at the cost of 30,000 per person.

The defenders of the death penalty said that the alternative to the death penalty was doing nothing. They called rehabilitation a myth. They called capital punishment society's way of defending itself and said it was necessary if we were to have an orderly and civilized society. Parente told the audience that in Florida, before the execution of one of the death row lifers, the inmates were screaming and in an uproar. After it was over, they were quiet and "well-behaved". Parante had also said that "those" people can't use circumstances as an excuse, because in the 1920's people came to America who where "poor, very poor, but they didn't murder, they had respect for country, God and law". Parente also said of the opposition, "they're trying to feed you pablum, when they make it a rich/poor issue, when they throw in minorities".

Representative Parente's words only seem to validate a point Dr. Bowers brought up. He said that this system does not function objectively and that our "extra-legal" biases are definitely imposed on the system. Therefore our decisions are going to be less than objectively accurate. He went on to say that the appeal for capital punishment was being made to people on a gut level and that it was no accident that the death penalty issue is brought up around election time. He also said that out of a desire for vengeance, and in desperation for answers, we reach for straws. He suggested more preventive measures like handgun control and said many more steps were needed.

His counterpart, Representative Collins agreed that change was needed. He said that the criminal justice system (including rehabilitation) was in serious need of attention and repair. He said that the entire system needed to be toughened, tightened, and speeded up. He felt bail was a big problem in the structure.

Collins said that opposition to the death penalty was not opposition to making the state safer, it was opposition to a method that did not work. Collins repeatedly emphasized that opposition to the death penalty was not in favor of laxity towards crime, but in favor of answers that addressed the problem more directly at its roots. His opposition to restoration of the death penalty therefore was based on the fact that capital punishment was not the answer society needed because it was not effective. For example, police officer killings are higher in capital punishment states while murder rates are lower in abolition states. Why employ a costly system that does not work? Bowers said that what we as a people should really want is a system that maximizes justice and effectively controls crime. "Capital punishment is bankrupt on both accounts."

The advocates of the death penalty did not deny or refute any of the evidence presented by the opposition. They simply made emotional appeals. Bowers and Collins appeared to this reporter to have the better evidence and presented the better case. Yet one got the feeling after the debate was concluded that the advocates for the death penalty were not as worried as they might have been. It seemed to me that they were relying on the 'right people' to vote.

In this "democratic" society of ours, what is done equals the will of the people. If you do not vote it does not mean you were not in favor of something. It simply means that you have turned your power over to someone else, given away your voice. What they decide becomes your choice. And it stands. The question is: do you want the death penalty representing you?

A Solid Dose Of Home Grown Reggae Music

By Max Senior

The University of Massachusetts was again blessed with a solid dose of "Home Grown" reggae music prescribed by probably the two best reggae performers, Jimmy Cliff and Peter Tosh. Both artists are regarded as outstanding songwriters, arrangers and performers and are well recognized on the international scene.

Jimmy Cliff, as a singer/performer has been well known in Jamaica for over twenty years. Starting in the early 1960's with the Ska and then revolving with the times into Rocksteady and culminating into the more complete and fulfilling sound (at the beginning of the 70's) now best known as reggae. Jimmy Cliff is most often recognized for his leading role in the film "The Harder They Come", produced by Perry Henzel. The "Harder They Come" got world wide recognition because of its social and political implications and also because of the "New Rhythm", which is part of the film and which was ignored, until then, outside of Jamaica. Even in Jamaica, many of the so called "middle class", could not associate themselves with the movie, or the music for that matter, which at the time was known as "Rasta Music".

Many viewers of the film still have not "gotten the message" that the film and the music carry, but are more entertained by the reggae beat while totally ignoring the words, or perhaps just not understanding them.

Peter Tosh, internationally known only recently has been well known in Jamaica for a very long time. Until the mid 70's he was a "key man" for the late Bob Marley, and was probably as important to Bob Marley and the Wailers as was Bunny Wailer. Peter Tosh is better known as a protest songwriter/singer than he is as an entertainer. Songs such as "I'm a walking razor...I'm dangerous" and "Everyone is crying out for peace, none is crying out for justice" carry in them a clear-cut rejection of the status quo.

His performance on Thursday night at the Fine Arts Center was typical of Peter Tosh, well known for his "Ganja-smoking on stage". He delights in being shielded by his smoke out of which he sometimes emerges smiling. Quite unlike his recorded music, it was difficult to understand the lyrics as he sang. To perform, and satisfy an audience, immediately behind Jimmy Cliff, is also a very difficult task indeed. Peter Tosh's music and performance were overwhelming and at times overpowering, and as we, in Jamaica, would sometimes say, "to listen to good reggae it has to crack in your ear". The music on Thursday night, from both artists, did crack in my ear.

I have never seen an artist as calm and relaxed after almost two hours of "nonstop" music, as Jimmy Cliff was after his performance on Thursday night at the Fine Arts Center. Back stage, he was very quick and sharp with answers to the many questions that were thrown at him. At one point he seemed annoyed when someone asked him about his taking the place of Bob Marley. He responded without much hesitation that each man has his own place and that no one can fill another man's place because a man cannot do the work another man has to do. During the interview, Jimmy Cliff revealed that he gave Bob Marley and Desmond Decker,(another well known Jamaican singer)their first break, in 1963, by introducing them to a producer who gave them the opportunity to make their first record. Jimmy Cliff, who reveals no external evidence of being a Rastafarian--no locks, only a little beard, no Rasta tam, and does not appear Dread--was asked if he is a Rastafarian, and if this was a new "thing" for him, he replied that he has always been one because he was born a black man, and it is not something you become, it is something that you are born with. "It is not something external; it is within the heart. It's Love" he said. His language is occasionally punctuated with some Rasta speech, which is typical of many Jamaicans, whether he/she is a Rasta or not, words such as, I man, Idren, Love, Iery, Hail, and Peace.

Jimmy Cliff expressed his great desire to play more of his "Bongoman" type of music, basically drums and vocal, a style he said that he grew up with. He undoubtedly was referring to the drums and chants of the Pocomania, a socio-religious group of people from the poor working class, still existing in Jamaica, who flourished during the 1940's and 50's. Their drumming and chanting is carry-over from the days of slavery, but more so from our African heritage and traditions. He soberly said, however, that this type of music is not what the people want to hear.

Asked about his trips to South Africa, Jimmy Cliff said that laws prohibiting people from going to South Africa were not for people like himself, because he was bringing love to the people of South Africa, blacks as well as whites, and that his next visit to South Africa will be to "celebrate the Victory", referring, I believe, to Majority Rule.

He has also toured Zambia, the Cameroons and several other African countries where he said that he was well received. He feels that reggae is received better in Africa than any other place, even Ja (referring to Jamaica). He hinted that this may be his last tour of North America for some time, and that he might be putting more interest in Latin America and Africa.

Probed as to why he and Peter Tosh were on tour together, Jimmy Cliff replied that they had admired each other for a long time and this was an opportunity to do a tour together. Asked if there were plans to do a record together, Jimmy Cliff replied, "Anything is possible" but that there were no immediate plans. What Jimmy has planned is to do another movie, which is now in the scripting stage. Asked how he keeps fit and relaxed after so many rigerous performances, he replied: "It's love. It's love."

Free Mayor Eddie Carthan

Eddie James Carthan was born October 18, 1949, in Tchula, Mississippi, the son of James and Carrie Carthan, married the former Shirley Unger, has three children, Cissye Lynette 8, Neketa Genice 6, and Edelia Juana 3, and was voted the mayor of Tchula, Mississippi in 1977.

He is a deacon of Zion City M.B. Church and a member of King David Masonic Lodge No. 112.

He attended Freedom School in the 60's and was arrested with Martin Luther King.

He earned a Bachelor of Science degree with a major in Social Science at Mississippi Valley State University and a Master of Science in Educational Administration and Supervision from Jackson State University. He studied Law at the University of Mississippi.

Eddie Carthan began his professional career as an instructor of Social Studies at Saints College in 1972. He was elected to the Holmes County Board of Education and became president of that Board. In 1973 he worked with the U.S. Dept. of Commerce, Office of Minority Business Enterprise as a business specialist at Lexington Business Services, Inc. He became a leading Holmes County businessman owning 5 businesses, all now defunct due to continuous political harassment.

The election of Eddie James Carthan on June 7, 1977, was made possible by the Voting Rights Act of 1965. Carthan was the first Black since Reconstruction to be elected mayor of a biracial town in the Mississippi Delta. The election of independent Black politicians like Eddie Carthan is a threat to the Deep South's white power structure.

Tchula: The Reality

Located in the rich Delta region, where cotton is king, Tchula (pop. 3,000 – 80% Black) has been ruled for over a century by a small number of white planters and merchants. The legacy of economic and political oppression is staggering

- over 30% unemployment
- 81% of the housing units deteriorating
- 66% of the population on welfare
- 47% of homes without plumbing facilities

The Reaction

Carthan's refusal to accept a bribe from the white power structure signaled the start of a campaign to destroy him. In collusion with county and state officials, a controlling faction of the Board of Aldermen employed rumor, negative press, court suits, physical threats, economic sanctions, and brute force to prevent him from carrying out his duties. When this failed to stop him, they resorted to political frame-ups reminiscent of the tactics used against Black elected officials 100 years ago.

- Mayor Carthan and 6 officials of Tchula were convicted of simple assault on a law enforcement officer and sentenced to three years in the State Penitentiary. The case was appealed to the Mississippi Supreme Court and the lower court's ruling has been upheld.
- Mayor Carthan was convicted of giving false information to a federally insured bank, even though two men convicted in the case admitted forging his name on documents.
- Mayor Carthan and his brother, Joseph, were arrested and indicted for "armed robbery", "conspiracy" and "capital murder". The charges have arisen from the murder of Roosevelt Granderson, one of the Black Alderman who sided with the white power structure. In June 1981, Granderson was killed in an attempted robbery of the store where he worked. Two men have been brought to trial for the murder. One told a visitor to the jail that authorities had attempted to get him to implicate Carthan in the murder in exchange for his freedom. He refused. The second man pleaded guilty to a reduced charge, apparently in exchange for testifying that the Carthan brothers ordered the murder. This trial begins October 19, 1982. The maximum penalty for capital murder is death.

The Implications

Carthan symbolized the possibility of genuine enfranchisement and political democracy fo. Blacks across the South. He has been convicted because he can not be bought. If the case against him is allowed to stand, progress for all Blacks and minorities will be set back for decades.

The trials of Eddie Carthan and the Tchula 7 have aroused concern nationally and internationally. The World Student Christian Federation has endorsed the campaign to free them. The National Council of Churches, after sending a delegation to Mississippi to investigate, passed a resolution calling for a Justice Department investigation into the harassment of Black elected officials and the prosecution of Eddie Carthan.

All over the nation, people of good will are rallying to the cause of the Tchula 7. The most dramatic support has come from Holmes County, where local residents raised the $230,000 bond for Eddie and Joe Carthan, and on the day of their arraignment hundreds came to the court house to express their solidarity.

Call to October 16th Rally

Dr. Martin Luther King once referred to Mississippi as the state "sweltering in the heat of injustice". It is clear, in light of the Mississippi Supreme Court decision, that the State of Mississippi feels it cannot allow such a symbol of courage and strength as exemplified by Eddie James Carthan and the Tchula 7 to go unchecked.

The purpose of this rally is to call all people of this country who love freedom and believe that all human beings have a natural right to justice, to come to Jackson on October 16th.

Eddie Carthan's life is in danger. Thousands of people gathering in Jackson will have an impact on the murder trial which begins October 19th.

This act of participation will tell Mississippi and the world that this is a "new day", that Martin's dream becomes reality at last, that Eddie Carthan and the Tchula 7 must be free to pursue justice, freedom and "the good life" for all people everywhere and that Black political rights must be preserved.

Come join us in Solidarity.

INTERNATIONAL UPDATE

by Robert Teixeira

Marcos in the U.S.

Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos arrived in Washington on an official visit last week, to discuss the future of U.S. military bases in his country and economic trade between the two countries.

The U.S. maintains two large military bases in Philipine territory, the Subic Bay Naval base which is used by the Seventh Fleet, and the Clark Field Air base, station of the 13th Brigade Tactical Air Force.

The Reagan Administration wants to conclude a new agreement as soon as possible with the dictator in view of the fact that the 1979 agreement on the bases will expire soon.

Top government officials in this country consider the Philippine bases as strategic locations to control the westward movement of troops that could be deployed in the oil-rich Middle East and the Indian Ocean.

Marcos' regime is beset with deep economic problems stemming from a foreign debt of more than $15 billion and a balance of payments deficit this year of $539 million.

U.S. strengthens Racist Police Force

The Reagan Administration's continued complicity with the racist Apartheid regime of South Africa was exposed once again last Monday when the State Department issued an export license for the sale of 2,500 high voltage night sticks for the fascist state's police force.

The sale of these high voltage batons, which are similar to cattle prods, seems to confirm the Administration's official vow to develop friendlier relations between the nations.

Hong Kong Sovereignty Talks Open

British prime minister Margaret Thatcher went on an offical visit last Wednesday to the People's Republic of China for talks concerning the future sovereignty of Hong Kong. Hong Kong is presently a British Crown colony whose lease is due to expire in fifteen years.

On Thursday, the Chinese Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang stressed the Republic's intention to re-assert full control over the long-held colony.

Death Toll of Massacre

The Lebanese Red Cross announced last Thursday that the final death toll of the massacre of Palestinian men, women and children in the Shatila and Sabra refugee camps was estimated to be well over a thousand.

Meanwhile, the Israeli Government continues to deny any involvement in the massacre despite clear evidence that its army surrounded and supervised the so-called "mop-up operations" conducted by the extreme right-wing Phalangist militia. For example, the Israeli Army did not allow any of the defenseless Palestinian civilians to leave the camp area during the time of their slaughter. Also, truck loads of bodies were allowed to pass through Israeli Army lines withouth interference.

B.M.C.P. A Call For Unity: Tune In

by Victoria Carter

Black Mass Communications Project is a media organization broadcasting and creating alternative programming for the Third World community on campus. BMCP has a wide audience which is the basis for one of the Project's slogans: "if your radio isn't on BMCP, then it's not really on".
BMCP has about 72 hours of broadcast time on WMUA and it's programs are on at various times of the day or night. In the future they would like to achieve across-the-board block programming so that BMCP would be on at the same time each day. Recently, many of the hours that BMCP has had access to the station have been devoted to Urban Contemporary Dance Music (Funk?). But, starting in October, shows offering more of a diverse spectrum of Black Music will be aired. Also, a new video resource is being developed by Frank O.

BMCP will also feature a public affairs show which the public affairs director is currently organizing. The show will air once a week on Saturdays from 7-8 p.m. and will focus on some of the many Black heroes who have come to the U. Mass campus. For example, Angela Davis, Dick Gregory, Andrew Salkey, and Malcom X are only a few of the recordings in the BMCP tape library. These tapes will be released to the community on loan, to high schools, for example, and other interested groups.

The project is interested in recruiting Third World men and women to play Reggae, Blues, African-American Instrumental and other forms of Black Music. Also, folks interested in news, editing, production, public affairs and sports are welcome. Several people, after working with BMCP, have gone on to work professionally in radio.

Northampton man arraigned in alleged rape of UMass woman

By KEN LUNDBERG
Collegian Staff

A man was arraigned yesterday morning in Hampshire County District Court in Northampton for the alleged rape of a 21 year-old University of Massachusetts student early Sunday morning.

Jose Felipe Martinez, 24, formerly of New York City, pleaded innocent to charges of aggravated rape and was transferred to the Northampton House of Correction after failing to meet a $50,000 cash bail.

Judge Alvertus J. Morse ordered the case continued until Oct. 6 when a pre-trial hearing will be held.

Amherst Police said the unidentified UMass student from Northampton was allegedly attacked at 2:30 a.m. Sunday in the area of Amity Street and South Prospect Street.

Police took the victim to the UMass infirmary where she was treated and released.

Police Chief Donald Maia said he would not specify how the rape was reported or what injuries were sustained by the victim for fear he would "jeopardize the case or infringe on the rights of the individual apprehended."

Prosecutors at the arraignment argued for the $50,000 cash bail on grounds that Martinez has no known address, although he had been occasionally sheltered at the A Better Chance (ABC) House, which provides an educational program for disadvantaged youngsters, on North Prospect Street in Amherst.

A spokesperson in the Hampshire County Clerk of Courts Office said the pre-trial conference which will be held in less than two weeks was scheduled so soon because of Martinez's incarceration while the case is being continued.

Rape prevention is common sense - it can't be guaranteed

By AMY JENNESS
Collegian Staff

There are no guarantees in rape prevention but it is important for women to become aware that rape can happen to anyone, said the Coordinator of the Counselor/ Advocate program, Catherine Roach.

"People need to educate themselves and believe that it can happen to them. Women need to know that rapes occur and many are planned," Roach said.

Tildy Turchinetz, a full-time advocate for the Women's Issues Team within Student Center for Educational Research Advocacy (SCERA), said much of rape prevention is common sense.

"I would suggest taking self-defense courses, not walking alone at night and be very careful about the company you keep because most rapes occur by acquaintances. Most of these are common sense suggestions," she said.

"Even if individually everyone takes these precautions there are still going to be rapes. On a collective approach, there needs to be people working together to try and understand and educate each other around the issues of rape," said Turchinetz.

The Hampshire County Rape Information and Prevention Project states in its handbook, Rape: A Handbook of Preventive Measures," Ideally women should not have to change their lifestyles to insure their safety. Unfortunately, the realities of rape often necessitate such measures."

The handbook also said, "Because the problems of rape are so complex, rape prevention requires far more than locked windows and drawn shades. It involves changing attitudes and practices in our society that promote violence against women, as well as organizing cooperative efforts to make our homes, streets and workplaces safer."

Federal Bureau of Investigation statistics show one out of every three women in the United States will be raped in her lifetime. The FBI also reports one in every ten rape vicitims report the rape to the police.

The United States Department of Justice statistics conflict with the FBI's figures. They report out of 135,000 women interviewed, of those who were raped, 50 percent never reported the crime.

Students express their views on UM residential areas

By JONATHAN PERRY
Collegian Correspondent

Students living in residential areas on campus are usually satisfied with returning to their old rooms, or with the rooms assigned by Housing Services. Some, however, decide to try something new and begin looking at other areas off campus. Personal taste in living style is always a major factor in choosing between the five residential areas on campus.

Dave Kezer, a freshman political science major, and Richard Gillis a freshman pre-med major, seem content with their dorms in Sylvan.

"I came here at orientation and liked what I saw, especially the suites. It's basically quiet and removed from campus but I can still go to parties if I want to. And it's good to study during the week," said Kezer.

The only drawbacks from his point of view is that it's somewhat removed from the main part of campus.

Gillis expressed the same sentiment, adding that because Sylvan is somewhat removed from the main pulse of campus, "it's very easy to study during the week. On the weekend there are parties but they are small and don't get out of hand."

It's also safer because of the two locks on the doors instead of one, which is what the other dorms have. Also each building has it's own recreation room and that's a big plus," he said.

The "Bowl" at Orchard Hill, one of the five residential areas at the University of Massachusetts.

Tim Griffith, a junior psychology major, and Greg Tsongalis, a junior zoology major, belong to Alpha Phi Omega, but live in dorms at Orchard Hill. Griffith, who originally lived in Sylvan, moved because, he said, "I felt like I was living in a cave because we were segregrated."

"It's open here, you meet people and for me it's a better experience." He emphasized that Orchard Hill was especially good because "it has a big residential college and the professors live in dorms here. Any questions you have go to them."

"You can come up and escape from campus, but it's also close enough for facilities and conveniences. I'm only one of three original members living here. And co-ed living is great in getting the sexes to know each other," Tsongalis said.

Both however, oppose the single sex bathrooms very strongly, claiming the hassles they create throw up an unnecessary roadblock that causes friction between the two sexes.

Barbara Supeno, an undeclared sophomore, and Alice Lee, a sophomore hotel, restaurant and travel administration (HRTA) major, evaluated their homeground, Northeast.

Supeno, who has lived in Northeast since her freshman year, likes the area because "it's a laid back environment."

"You get to know people because it's a small area and if you want to study it's great because of the library across the street." Compared to Southwest, the whole section in the Quad is small and open and everyone sees everyone," Supeno said.

"The activities are fun because we have volleyball and football games here," Lee added.

"It's a real community here. Everybody joins in on the fun," she said.

Peacekeeping troops welcomed by Lebanese

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — French and Italian peacekeeping troops, welcomed by smiling Palestinian children and women offering tea, moved into the Sabra and Chatilla refugee camps yesterday, scene of the Beirut massacre.

But 1,200 U.S. Marines, third component of a new peacekeeping force, remained offshore, awaiting the complete withdrawal of Israeli forces from this bloodied capital.

"Tonight we will sleep in our house because the French are here," said Amal Alaa Adein, a 17-year-old girl whose father, grandfather and grandmother were murdered in the Sept. 16-18 massacre, carried out by Lebanese Christian militiamen.

She, her mother and sister have been staying at a school outside the camps since they were afraid the killers would return. "Now we are not afraid," she said.

So far, Lebanese authorities have confirmed that about 600 people were killed in the bloodbath. Yesterday, hundreds of women from the camps gathered tearfully at a mass grave in Chatilla to pray for the victims.

In Israel, Prime Minister Menachem Begin's Cabinet was scheduled to meet today, and the Israeli news media predicted Begin would bow to intense public pressure for a full judicial inquiry into Israeli conduct during the camp killings.

Benefit increase for government aided families

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's 22 million food stamp recipients will get an average 8.5 percent benefit increase — their first in two years — on Friday as the government begins a new fiscal year.

But the start of fiscal 1983 will also usher in cutbacks and economy measures in other welfare programs and Medicare, the health insurance program for 28 million elderly and disabled Americans.

Many adults seeking Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) will be required to look for work first.

Medicare will no longer pay for private rooms in hospitals or skilled nursing facilities, unless the patient's condition requires seclusion. The health insurance program will only pay for semi-private rooms, saving $54 million.

Food stamp benefits have not risen since 1980. The boost on Friday will raise the average monthly benefits for a family of four by $20 from $233 to $253.

Congress skipped last year's normal annual adjustment in the so-called "thrifty food plan" for food stamp recipients as part of President Reagan's first round of budget cuts.

The lawmakers also rejiggered the formula to hold down this year's increase in the $11.3 billion program. They ordered $548 million in savings — including reduced payments to states with high error rates — in a bid to keep the fiscal 1983 costs under $11 billion.

Air traffic controller fired: the union forced the strike

BOSTON — A North Kingstown, R. I. air traffic controller, fired in last year's nationwide strike, was harassed by the union into striking and should get his job back, with back pay, a federal official said yesterday.

William Carroll III, presiding federal officer in the case, said this is the first time in New England that the Federal Aviation Administration's (FAA) firing of a controller is being reversed because of union harassment.

The FAA can stop the decision reinstating Arnold Smith, a 33-year-old father of three, from becoming final in 35 days by asking for review, Carroll added. The decision was issued Friday.

"My initial decision was to reverse the FAA's removal of Mr. Smith based on the finding that he had ... proven that he was unduly harassed by union members into striking," said Carroll, Boston regional director of the Merit Systems Protection Board.

Mormon researcher slashed accused of false cancer scare

MARIANNA, Fla. — A doctor has been lured to a rendezvous and stabbed for the second time since he reported what he thought was a high cancer rate in a little Florida town, his brother said yesterday.

Dr. Frederick Boedy, who was slashed in the arm Sept. 15 and whose carport caught fire three days later, had already talked of leaving the area to protect his family.

He was stabbed in the stomach late Sunday or early yesterday and was recovering at Jackson County Hospital in Marianna, Pete Boedy said by telephone from his home in Atlanta. Police said the doctor was stabbed at his office in Marianna, the seat of rural Jackson County.

"The wounds were more serious this time," Pete Boedy said. "He required surgery." The 30-year-old family physician was listed in good condition, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Dukakis plans to veto Kings death penalty bill, given the chance

BOSTON — The Democratic-controlled Legislature has moved quickly to highlight an issue that the party's own nominee for governor, Michael S. Dukakis, might just as soon avoid.

The Criminal Justice Committee is holding a hearing on a death penalty bill today filed by Gov. Edward J. King shortly before King's defeat by Dukakis in the Democratic primary Sept. 14.

Dukakis opposes the death penalty and has said he would veto King's bill, given the chance. His opponent in the November finale, Republican John W. Sears, says he believes capital punishment is a deterrent, and he has specifically endorsed King's bill.

The issue has been a perennial one in Massachusetts for a decade, every since the U.S. Supreme Court threw out all existing capital punishment statutes and then opened the door for new ones.

Vietnam veteran suffers post traumatic stress disorder

SOUTH DEERFIELD — A two-tour Vietnam veteran and holder of the Purple Heart apparently flashed back to those Southeast Asia jungles while crouched in his doorway here holding off police with a rifle and a shotgun, his psychiatrist has said.

Roger "Doc" Storozuk, 32, suffered from post traumatic stress disorder, which has afflicted other Vietnam veterans, Northampton State Hospital psychiatrist Dr. Claire Marshall has told police, the Greenfield Recorder reported yesterday.

A medical technician was wounded in the standoff on Friday as Storozuk spent 45 minutes crouched in his doorway with a rifle and shotgun, police said.

Storozuk, 32, called the technician, Dana Wolfram, a VC — a Viet Cong soldier — as the man edged toward him, backed by police. During a struggle, a bullet from the rifle lodged in Wolfram's pelvis, said the police.

Job discrimination suits have dropped, contradicting Reagan

WASHINGTON — Internal records of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission and a lawyers' study of Justice Department operations, contradict President Reagan's claim that his administration has enforced civil rights laws more actively than its predecessors.

An EEOC document obtained by The Associated Press showed that, contrary to Reagan's recent claim to a black audience, the number of job discrimination suits approved by the commission has dropped sharply.

And the independent Washington Council of Lawyers concluded in a recent report that "the administration has retreated from well-established, bipartisan civil rights policies" in several areas. Enforcement of school desegregation and fair housing laws has all but halted, according to the 138-page study.

Only in prosecuting police brutality and similar violent denials of individuals' civil rights has the Justice Department excelled, the report said.

Chairman says, Communications courses limited

By BILL THOMAS
Collegian Correspondent

About 800 students were unable to take courses they had preregistered for in the Communications Studies department this semester due to the limited resources said department chairman, Jay Savereid.

Nearly 200 students registered as undecided are attempting to be admitted to the Communication Studies department, Savereid said. This is despite the establishment last fall of prerequisite courses a student must pass before being admitted to the major.

"The centrality of mass communication and other communication theory in the lives of people in the American society really means that we're not a flash in the pan. Students are going to want to study this and students are going to want to find jobs and so we do deserve more resources," Savereid said.

The department's problems of a 40-1 student/instructor ratio and mass lecture teaching in the 100 and 200 level courses are due in part to the sudden popularity of Communication Studies with broadcasting, specifically television studies, being the areas experiencing the greatest demand, Savereid said.

The School of Social and Behavioral Sciences, which includes the Communication Studies department, accounts for 18 percent of the instruction on campus but only receives 11 percent of the University's budget, Savereid said. He said the shortage of faculty, not a lack of technology, is a problem as the curriculum is oriented toward theory rather than as a training program.

Last semester the existence of the Communication Studies department was threatened by former Chancellor Henry Koffler's Long Range Plan. Under this proposal the department would have been split up and combined with other departments. However, this proposal was dismissed in the faculty senate late last semester after the Communication Studies department received what Savereid called "strong support" in a letter from a Communication Studies department head at Stanford University in which the department head wrote in behalf of the UMass department.

The currently emerging report of Acting Chancellor Loren Baritz is more supportive of communication studies. In this report the department is mentioned as being oversubscribed and in need of more resources, Savereid said.

The results from a survey Savereid said was given to Communication Studies students who had graduated five years ago showed the largest single group of graduates who responded went into the broadcast industry.

Voter registration drive is successful Town Clerks office to return to campus

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Staff

Following the registration of 1,000 University of Massachusetts students last week, the Town Clerk's Office will return to the campus next Monday and Tuesday in an effort to register more students to vote in the Nov. 2 gubernatorial election.

Weather permitting, a table will be set up outside the Student Union Building on Tuesday. The registration table will be run both days from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Tuesday, Oct. 5, is the last day Massachusetts residents may register to vote in the November 2 election. All Amherst residents, including UMass students wishing to vote here, are eligible to register for the gubernatorial election.

The last day of registration coincides with a Nuclear Freeze Rally, to be held Tuesday, October 5 in the Student Union Ballroom, or if it's a nice day on Metawampee Lawn near the Campus Center. The rally will feature a number of invited speakers, including Senator Edward Kennedy and James Taylor.

Included on the November ballot will be referendum questions concerning the nuclear freeze, the death penalty, nuclear power, and the Bottle Law.

Last week's registration drive prompted 489 students to register Tuesday and 527 to register Wednesday. Many students received special balloons from the Student Government Association which read, "I Registered to Vote Today."

"In a state election year, that's about on target," said Town Clerk Estelle Matusco. A similar number of students registered in the 1978 gubernatorial election, she noted.

"It (the number of students registering) depends many times on the issues and candidates," she said.

"In the last gubernatorial election, only nine percent of the eligible voters between the ages of 18 and 24 voted," said Sheila Sullivan, chairperson of the Public Policy Committee for the Student Government Association, which sponsored the voter registration drive last week.

"With this voter registration drive, we hope to change that," said Sullivan.

Grievance procedure to be completed before the end of semester

By LISA PEDULLA
Collegian Staff

The fifth draft of the sexual harrassment grievance procedure, which was initiated by former Chancellor Henry Koffler last September, is expected to be completed before the end of the semester, said Dr. Louis Fischer, acting assistant to the chancellor.

The sexual harassment policy of the University of Massachusetts states, "no member of the university community may sexually harass another." In accordance with federal regulations, the definition of sexual harassment reads as follows:

"Unwelcomed sexual advances, requests for sexual favors and other verbal or physical conduct of sexual nature constitute sexual harassment when: 1) submission to such conduct is made either explicitly or implicitly a term or condition of an individual's employment or academic work, 2) submission to or rejection of such conduct by an individual is used as the basis for employment or academic decisions affecting such individual or 3) such conduct has the purpose or effect of unreasonably interfering with an individual's work performance or of creating an intimidating, hostile or offensive working or academic environment.

At present, the procedure is being studied by two committees of the Faculty Senate. They will approve or disapprove of the draft at their October meeting, Fischer said. Fischer said the draft will not have to go back to the Board of Trustees. Fischer will recommend the draft to the new chancellor, and hopefully it will be enacted by the end of October, he said.

The present draft has been accepted by the UMass Legal Services Office (LSO), the Women's Issues Team, and the Student Government Association (SGA) Presidents Office. There have been some objections from the unions at the University on the basis that they need it to be incorporated into their contracts for their protection, said Jane Zbyszynski, a member of the Women's Issues Team of the Student Center for Education and Research Advocacy (SCERA).

"The procedure is pretty much what we wanted," said Zbyszynski.

"It doesn't take away from students or favor employees over students," she said.

The fourth draft, which was submitted over the summer, was rejected by members of the LSO and the Women's Issues Team on the grounds that it had no standard terms for review.

"The other procedure had no accountability of review. It could be handled on any basis," said Ruth Diaz of LSO.

Diaz said she met with Dr. Fischer over the summer to discuss her dissatisfaction with the fourth draft. Diaz then proceeded to develop a new draft and changes were made by Fischer based on feedback he had received from the various groups involved with the procedure.

"Dr. Fischer has been very good about taking suggestions and incorporating everyone's views," Diaz said.

She said Fischer approached the procedure from a balanced position. He has been sensitive to the issue of sexual harassment and how it could be abused.

"We tried coming up with a procedure that was sensitive to all," Diaz said.

Fischer said he is satisfied that the procedure is as good a document as they could put together. It provides an adequate due process and a vehicle to assert the rights of the involved parties, he said.

UMass Health Services, Collegian commended for SAP's success

By ANN CARRNS
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Daily Collegian and the University Health Services Department received commendations from the Amherst Board of Selectmen last night for their efforts in making the town's Speed and Alcohol Patrol (SAP) program a success.

Amherst Police Chief Donald Maia explained that the SAP program was successful because people became involved and made the community aware of it.

"Both the Collegian and University Health Services did a more than admirable job in promoting the (SAP) program," Maia said.

"Health Services worked with us in designing the program and held educational programs to inform the student body about it."

"Through the Collegian's articles, cartoons, and editorials, everyone knew of the program's existence," he continued.

"I don't think there is anyone in the Amherst area who doesn't know about SAP and why it exists," he said.

"We instituted the SAP program to address the previous years' accidents," Maia said. "It has been very successful. We didn't make the arrests we anticipated and we cut the number of automobile accidents drastically. This was due to the wide awareness promoted in the area."

Ed Levine, the Collegian's managing editor, and John Brobst, the paper's editor-in-chief, accepted the commendation on behalf of the Collegian news staff. Health Services Safety Officer Gilbert L. Motta accepted on behalf of the Health Services Department. The awards were presented by Chairman of the Board Edith Wilkinson.

The commendation specifically mentioned the Collegian's previous managing editor Steven E. Semple and cartoonist Mark Rollins for their contributions to SAP's success.

"It's our job," Levine commented later.

In other business, the selectmen heard a status report on a childcare survey which they commissioned last year.

Deborah Carney, a childcare specialist, told the selectmen that the results of the survey, a needs assessment of childcare in the Amherst area, will be available in October.

Art department classes, unique and diverse Students should use their resources more

By PAULA HOYT
Collegian Correspondent

Whether in the paint-spattered corridors of the Fine Arts Center studio wing, or in the shabby building known as "Shepherd's Cottage," University of Massachusetts art majors can be found in classroom atmospheres unfamiliar to most students.

"Despite the Fine Arts Center building, where we really function is in the old, run-down buildings no one else wants," UMass Art Department instructor Norm Phillips said last week.

The buildings where art students work are scattered all over campus, usually in very remote areas.

The Marshall Annex, a small, white, garage-like building in the northeast area of campus, houses a sculpture studio, a classroom area which most people do not realize exists.

The "art barn," another workplace for art majors, located behind the textbook annex and is the place where undergraduate Bachelor of Fine Arts (BFA) majors paint.

The Metals Lab used by the department dates back to the agricultural days of UMass history.

The environment within these art classrooms is distinctive and interesting. In the 4th floor wing of the Fine Arts Center are a number of small rooms where students paint nudes, inspect art objects, do photography or talk with instructors.

"The Art Department classes are unique and very diverse," said Phillips. In addition to major areas of study like ceramics, interior and graphic design, printmaking, and sculpture, other classes such as jewelry making are also offered.

Art history classes are located in Bartlett Hall, where there is also an enormous slide library, Phillips said.

The Herter Gallery is a more popular recognized aspect of the Fine Arts Department. The gallery is open to everyone interested in viewing the work on weekdays, from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Sundays, 2 to 5.

Exhibits, the first semester, are by local professional artists, and they change every three weeks, according to Gallery Director Mike Cobelyn.

During the second half of the semester, graduate students will be displaying thesis exhibits, Cobelyn said. Exhibits in October will include work by first year students, children's art, and faculty displays.

A Journey of truth

THIS JOURNEY
By James Wright
Atlantic, Little-Brown, 91 pp., $5.95 (paperbound)

By MYLES GORDON
Collegian Correspondent

This Journey, completed shortly before James Wright's death in 1980, is a book of visionary and reflective poetry of the highest quality.

This new collection is an amplification of the themes which have always been prominent in Wright's poetry — the constant contradictory struggle of the human condition, for which there is no resolution, and a transcendence that is found only in nature. "Briefly in harmony with nature before I die," says Wright, "(I say) Goodbye to the living place, and all I ask it to do is stay alive."

Approaching death, Wright doesn't fall into sentimentality or self-aggrandizement. Instead, the Pulitzer Prize-winning poet digs deeper to the core of existence than he has ever done before. He does this for a dual purpose. First, to make his final peace and understanding with the world, and second, to act as an enlightened emissary of this understanding to the rest of us.

This Journey is enormous in its scope and its maturity and wisdom. Wright doesn't concentrate as much on the futility of existence as he did in his Minneapolis Poem 15 years ago:

I wonder how many old men last winter
Hungry and frightened by namelessness prowled
The Mississippi Shore...dreaming
Of suicide in the river.

Instead, he comes to terms with existence now as just one aspect of life that doesn't necessarily have to be in control:

...The secret
Of this journey is to let the wind
Blow its dust all over your body
To let it go on blowing, to step lightly, lightly
All the way through your ruins...

Wright's poetry has religious overtones, but he refrains from idealism. He can't find anything to be wholly good or evil, right or wrong. Each poem is a combination of contradictory forces, especially poems dealing with interactions between people.

In a field outside of Pisa, I saw a shepherd
Blown a little
To one side by the cooling sunlight,
He leaned as though a good tree were holding
His body upright...
...I hope he sang to himself. I didn't feel like paying him to sing.

Wright graphically describes the innocence of the shepherd, and the beauty of his relationship to his flock and fields. But then he qualifies and taints it by including his own human folly of being unable to merely accept and appreciate the situation without introducing greed and irrelevancies.

The shepherd is in harmony with the land around him, the poet is in harmony with the scene before him, but were the two to interact, the transcendence would be gone, replaced with picayune triviality.

Many of the poems in This Journey are set in Europe. Wright, whose poetical mastery was developed in his pastoral, visionary insights dealing with the Midwest makes the step gracefully into Europe.

Yet in studying and interacting with Europe, he becomes a displaced person, wondering where he truly belongs:

I am going home with the lizard,
Were ever home is,
And lie beside him unguarded
In the clear sunlight.
We will lift our faces even if it rains...

The question is larger than a matter of geography. Where indeed can one, who is so in touch with the human predicament find a home? For Wright, the answer is in the ability to praise the living process and cycle:

I wonder why the beautiful moor bird
Won't leave me alone.
All I am doing is standing here
...Along the Adige, hoping
He will never die.

Through the changes and fluctuations of This Journey, Wright leaves us tranquil and shaken at the same time. He doesn't attempt to show us the way, or guide us. He reports to us, painfully and truthfully, the progress of his own journey, and leaves us assured that "Now we are all sitting here strangely/ On top of the sunlight."

A Chronicle of youth

By CHRISTINE MARINI
Collegian Staff

This is a book that can be approached from many angles. Historically, it stands as an invaluable first-person account of the first World War and of the early feminist movement in England. From Vera Brittain's own wartime nursing experiences, and from letters from her brother, at the Front, her fiance, and other friends, Brittain drew a realistic picture of how the war affected a country and a generation. But perhaps most crucially, Chronicle of Youth is a personal and highly moving account of one young woman's dealings with war, her turn from enthusiasm for the war to pacifism, and the literal and spiritual loss of youth.

When World War I broke out in 1914, Vera Brittain was the popular and attractive daughter of a wealthy merchant. Her early diaries tell of parties, dances, and endless tennis matches. But Brittain was also highly intelligent and bored with her idle, stifling life, and against parental opposition, she prepared for her examinations and won a scholarship to Oxford. She had earlier met Roland Leighton, a school chum of her brother Edward, and the diary follows their deepening relationship. For twenty-year-old Brittain, life was good, and her diary of these days is filled, as she says, with "lovely idealism, glorious faith, (and) pathetic verbosity."

But the die had been cast, and the shadow of war moved over this sunny world and colored Brittain's life and her writing. She writes with excitement in the early days of the war, about history being made and events taking place — and the feeling of being right in the middle of it. Then Roland and Edward go off to fight. Excitement fades with the day-to-day realities of war. Fear sets in. Wanting to contribute somehow to the event uppermost in all of their minds, Brittain, after her first year at Oxford, leaves to become a nurse. Her diary reflects the somber and tragic spirit that replaced earlier enthusiasm. And as her friends and her life are destroyed by the war, she writes of "the cumulative effect of day-by-day suspense and anguish, the unillumined length of the night which had done so much permanent quenching of youthful hope and energy before it was finished."

Vera Brittain's Chronicle is a moving work that clearly charts the effect of terrible events on one life. As Brittain writes in her introduction, "(I) therefore offer these humble and pathetic records of the past as a warning and challenge to both modern youth and its elders — who have not always profited as they should from the lessons we shared."

Bruce Springsteen, pictured above (at left) in concert with friend Robert Gordon, makes a return of sorts with his new album, Nebraska.

Bruce Springsteen's Nebraska a return to his roots

BY RICK ALMEIDA
Collegian Staff

Bruce Springsteen has made a folk album. Nebraska, the Boss's sixth album, is his most daring change of pace yet.

The album is a reflection on the state of the nation, with unemployment, crime and poverty the predominant themes.
Springsteen opens the album with the story of a Sarkweather-type mass murderer who refuses to repent. As he is sent to the electric chair, he says "They wanted to know why I did what I did/Well sir I guess there's just a meanness in this world."

While crimes of passion and desperation permeate the album, the musical content is the true revelation. Of the ten songs here, nine are simply acoustic guitar and harmonica. The guitar, however, is not a pretty, superfluous, James Taylor strum-along. It moans and howls much like acoustic blues, and is punctuated by Springsteen's most soulful harmonica playing to date.

Other than the Chuck Berryesque "Open All Night," this album contains no rock and roll. The E Street Band does not appear, nor do any of the studio musicians that made his other albums so impactful. So what we are left with is a working class man (not a working class myth, i.e. John Lennon) baring his soul. The result is amazing. In "Mansion on the Hill" Springsteen contrasts the factory workers with the wealthy living just outside the city: "Tonight down here in Linden Town/I watch the cars rushing by home from the mill/There's a beautiful full moon rising above/The mansion on the hill."

One of the more striking things about the album is its raw but crystal-clear production. The album was recorded on a simple four track cassette recorder, a far cry from the state-of-the-art digital process used to produce the perhaps over-slick The River. The return to basics has done wonders for Springsteen. His return to simpler instruments asserts him as an exceptional musical talent. His return to his basic mill town songwriting style puts him back in communication with his original fans. And his return to basic recording techniques has brought him a sound unlike anything heard on vinyl at the moment.

As with every release since Born to Run, the Boss has grown substantially. Unlike the other releases, he now breaks new ground in a stark, vulnerable, breathtaking way.

Black Affairs

Radio show is first of kind in New England

By PHILLIP JENNINGS
Collegian Staff

Director, producer and host of African Forum, Greg Anderson, said he believes nobody in this area is totally devoted to African affairs.

"There is a general 'Blackout' when it comes to the media voicing the views of Africans and African Affairs," said Anderson.

"People tend to get the impression that Africa is of no importance to the world's population, this is totally false," said Anderson.

Anderson, a major in communications and Afro-American studies at Hampshire College, introduced African Forum at WMUA six months ago and has received many letters of support from his dedicated listeners.

The show, African Forum is the number one African Affairs program in New England which features African news and a regular update on the African Liberation Movement.

WMUA is number one in public affairs because of programs such as African Forum which brings recognition to the station.

Anderson said there are many key minerals to be found in Africa which are of great importance to the Western world.

"Africa produces 95 percent of the world's diamonds. Cobalt, which is used to harden metals such as the tail fins of airplanes, is of vital importance to the West. 80 percent of the world's Cobalt is found in Zaire, central Africa. Western aviation cannot do without Cobalt," said Anderson.

Coca comes from Ghana which is the world's leading producer, Boxite also from Ghana and Copper which is found in Zaire and Zambia are all critical minerals which are needed by the Western industries. The West's interests lie in Africa.

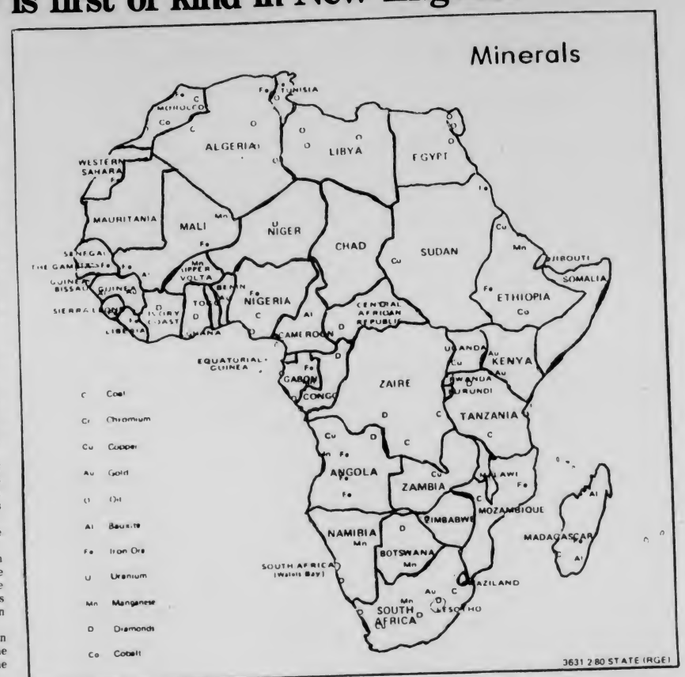
"Africa is also of great geopolitical importance to the United States," said Anderson.

"The American strategy, said Anderson," is to establish outposts around Africa such as Morocco, Egypt, the Somalias and the horn of Africa. "American forces use these outposts to support their interests like minerals as well as military outposts to intervene in the liberation struggles of the Africans," said Anderson.

Anderson said the U.S. has a base provided by an African puppeteer, an African leader who may support the U.S. because of aid, so that they may interveen in the freedom fight.

Concerning the freedom fight Anderson said SWAPO (South Westo Peoples Organization) EPLF (Eritrea People Liberation Front) and Congolese Liberation Front are making considerable progress in their fights for freedom.

"Reagan will not give the freedom fighters arms," said Anderson. "He always backs their enemies like South Africa. Freedom fighters have but not choice to take arms from wherever they can get them. If the Devil will give them arms they will take them. For as Dick Gregory once said, "He who controls Africa controls the destiny of mankind."



Third World Theater Presents "Home."

"HOME" surprisingly was conceived on a Greyhound bus December 22, 1976 when Samm-Art Williams was on his way to a small town in North Carolina. Through the bright and playful character of Cephus Miles, we experience the pain and struggle of a black man who has a strong will to survive in a world falling apart around him. On the journey back to his hometown Cephus receives "a gift of deep and loving friendship." Cephus introduces us to a stream of characters that show the humor and mobility of "HOME".

Energy of demonstrators must be applied to US problems

To the Editor:

The events in the Mideast the past few weeks have triggered many reactions and reactions to reactions. Through it all there pervades feelings of anger, disquiet, vehemence and fear. For me there is a feeling of sadness.

All around us you can see supporters of Lebanon, supporters of Israel, neither of which are intrinsically in opposition of the other, the haters of the Zionist movement, the haters and supporters of the Palestinians (Isaac, your two sons...), the haters of the Palestine Liberation Organization, the haters, the supporters, the them, the us, the you, the me.

The community of Amherst was a few days ago invited by the Organization of Arab Students to their very own live protest of the murders committed in Lebanon. But by showing up at the rally to share the grief and anger surrounding the event, you also supported the OAS's charges that the white supremist fascist state of Israel in fact committed the refugee camp murders as well as the assassination of the president-elect. The "invitation" also called for the universal destruction of the white supremist, fascist, racist movement of Zionism.

There are a lot of nasty things going on over in that part of the world and now you want to bring that fight over here. You have successfully created the sides of Israel/Zionism versus pro-PLO/Arab, but that fight is not here. You tell me that I can not cry for the murdered refugees because of my background, and that you in turn want me destroyed. The killing is a circle, you know, Israelis have killed Arabs, Arabs have killed Israelis, and Arabs have killed Arabs. Where was your fight and indignation when Syria decimated a city at the expense of thousands of lives?

But nasty things are going on over here, too. Ask the black children of Atlanta, or the blacks in Roxbury, or the poor or the unemployed. Take your anger, your violence, your accusations, and go somewhere else. There may not be any foolproof answer right now, but some of us know that the answer is not more killing.

Shedding some light on the dormitory lamp shortage

To the Editor:

As I sit here in the dark, trying to write this letter, I feel my eyes starting to strain and a headache coming on. The problem? Housing did not provide my room, or any other room in Kennedy, and several other dorms with any lighting other than a single ceiling light. Due to the fact that I live in a "Z" room, this leaves half the room in the dark after the sun goes down. At least last semester, I was provided with a desk lamp which produced enough light for the desk.

I am paying more money this semester than last semester, yet I am receiving less; something is askew here. I feel that my fellow students and myself are being cheated out of a necessity, not a luxury. My grades should not suffer because I cannot study in my room, where I prefer. I can think of better ways to spend my money, on such items as books and supplies, then to spend it on a lamp that should have been provided. Everyone who was deprived of a lamp should receive one immediately, the way it should have been!

From dead library to botanical wonder in one easy lesson

To the Editor:

A cheaper and more practical solution to our "dead" library problem (see MDC edit cartoon, p. 7, Sept. 23) may be to take cuttings from the ivy holding together South College, Goodell, Old Chapel and Memorial Hall, and starting growth at the base of the University Library.

The only expense would be to chip away portions of tile to get at the good earth, periodic feedings of fertilizer to stimulate growth and a bit o' water. Labor could be volunteered by a botany major or two.

By the end of the Century, the entire facing could be completely covered with green leaves whose stems would be glued to the mortar and prevent any chips from falling.

The Hall of Ivy thus resulting would stand as a beacon, visible even from Harvard and Yale, that would proclaim our dedication to humanistic education.

What Mother Nature hath joined, no man can put asunder!

We keep the faith.

The view from the far right

Perhaps the greatest thing to ever happen to tired old liberalism was the rise of the New Right and the Religious Right of which the Moral Majority (boo, hiss, eek, help!) is its most publicized member. Where before they could only point their tired fingers at that old whipping boy big business, now they can point, with juices really flowing, at that demonic, all consuming horde who are purported to want to drag the U.S. back into the dark ages. Want to get publicity, point the finger; want to get roaring applause, point the finger. As now, anyone who is anyone on the left are stumbling over themselves in attempts to outdo the other in doomsday predictions and thus prove their liberal purity. Our own college newspaper has run countless editorials all of which differ very little from each other or from those of their real world counterparts. Well today we are going to try a different point of view.

Katherine Curda

To start out let me state that though I am a conservative Republican (having come out of the closet). I am not a member of the New Right and often disagree with them on certain issues. The New Right is but one part of a broadbased conservative coalition and are definitely not its principle spokesmen. The important thing to remember however, is that though the New Right does not always speak for the conservative movement, it does indeed speak for a lot more people than it is given credit for. Why then are they being constantly attacked for exercising the political rights claimed by all other lobbying groups? The answer, of course, is that to many liberals it is okay to lobby congress or use the power of the judiciary as long as it is for ideas they consider to be important.

Has it ever occurred to those of you who condemn the actions of the New Right that not everybody in the country supports the ideas you support? Just as you decry the idea of permitting prayer in public schools there are a large majority of people who felt betrayed when what they thought was their right was taken away by a single court ruling. Just as you proclaim a woman's right to an abortion, there are large numbers of people, women included, who sincerely believe that abortion is murder of an innocent life. I have no doubt that just as the Collegian runs editorials attacking the New Right, there are other college papers who run editorials attacking the liberal and far left. What many people fail to realize is that ours is a vast and diverse country and the values held in Massachusetts are not necessarily those of Virginia or Kansas. What then to do about this?

For many people, unfortunately, the answer seems to be to simply declare your beliefs correct and brand those who disagree with you as wrong. Are those who claim to be the "Real Majority" being any less arrogant in their claims than the Moral Majority which they attack? If one scans the political spectrum it becomes apparent that the tactics of the New Right are little different than many other single issue groups. Labor groups vow to defeat anti-labor members, feminists attack anti-ERA members. The National Education Association, considered to be the most powerful lobby in America, has targeted for defeat of all those who opposed the creation of the Education Department. So what is the difference between this and the single-issue politics of the New Right that they are so attacked for? Simple! Those who attack the New Right agree with those other goals and therefore political arrogance is magically transformed into political activism. Thus it is okay for bishops to demand a nuclear freeze, but not to campaign against it. They can speak in favor of abortion and revolution, but not against it. One side becomes a beacon of sanity, while the other is branded a harbringer of right wing paranoia. My, aren't double standards convenient.

In closing it is important to remind those out there who cry that the New Right is trying to take over the government of one important fact. If it had not been for the continual growth of government and judicial power so championed by liberals as the true way to achieve their idea of social justice, there would not have been this power left over for the New Right to use once all of you were out of power. The monster you spent so much time creating has been captured by someone else and all of you who built it have no one to blame but yourselves when others use it to forment their ideas on social policy. After all, who wrote the book?

Intellectual diversity is the key to their success

By JEFF POTTER
Collegian Correspondent

"The key to this department is variety," James Crotty, chairman of the Economics Department at the University of Massachusetts said.

"We have a great diversity of intellectual culture," he said.

Crotty said most economic departments at other universities are conservative, yet at UMass, students are exposed to many theories of economics including Marxism and Neo-Classicism.

"This department has it all," Crotty said. He says the diversity of the department and the present economic situation help make the Economics Department one of the most popular and overcrowded majors at UMass.

With a student to faculty ratio of 170-to-1, the Economics Department faces its own problems with supply and demand.

"We do not have sufficient resources to meet the demands of the students," Stephen A. Resnick, chairman of the Personnel Committee of the Economics Department said.

Collegian photo by Jim Powers

Chairman of the University of Massachusetts Economics Department, James Crotty.

He said the problems of budget cuts by the state have effected the quality of education at UMass. He said there seems to be competition between the private universities and the larger state ones.

"The state should be proud and have a commitment to this university," Resnick said.

UMass has never received the recognition that it should and the state should make a monetary committment to this university and to all public higher education, he said.

Resnick said he feels the new governor will realize the importance of public higher education and help meet the needs of the student better than Governor King has.

"This university is a jewel but they don't let it shine, they just keep chipping away at it," Resnick said.

The supply-side economics and trickling-down theories of President Reagan have also hurt the university and are met with criticism in the Economics Department.

"He (Reagan) has a simplistic view of the economy, but it's dangerous," he said.

Dorm life

Southwest, which enjoys the reputation for being the rowdiest area on campus, has both good and bad points, according to two Southwest roommates. Cindy Howland, a sophmore chemistry major said Southwest was originally their fourth choice and they were both "stuck here", but that they love it.

"There is always something going on here, always excitement," Keats said.

"You make a lot of friends because it's so big and there's such a variety of people her," Howand said.

Although she said it is hard to study, Howland explained that "you can go to another place if you really want quiet. There are plenty of other places."

A problem both felt needs to be dealt with is the maintenance of the pyramids.

John Downie, an undecided freshman, and Rodney Holt, a freshman engineering major, are roommates living in Baker in Central. John chose Central because he "had heard it was nice from peers who had moved on campus."

Although he admits that when he first arrived "the dorms looked like cell blocks," Downie said "once you get in and see the possibilities for fixing up a room it looks a lot better."

It "wasn't quite as nice as I expected. I heard that the Central dorms were renovated but ours wasn't. We had to fix it up a lot. The people are nice, though and easy to get along with," Holt said.

Asked whether it was too noisy to study, Holt shook his head. "No, I can't hear the noise because my stereo is up too loud."

Abortion protest Oct. 4

There will be a silent protest of existing and proposed restrictions on access to abortions from 4:30 to 5:30 p.m. on Oct. 4 at Northampton's Coolidge bridge. The protest is sponsored by Isis, a reproductive rights group active in Hampshire and Franklin counties.

The protest is in memory of Rosie Jimenez who died on Oct. 3 in 1977 from an illegal abortion because she could not afford a medically safe abortion. According to Isis similar rallies will be held around the nation to mourn her death and reiterate the importance of access to safe, legal abortions for all women.

Anyone who supports abortion rights is urged by Isis to attend the protest and to bring a sign.

UMASSPIRG returns

The Massachusetts Bottle Bill is just one of the issues the University of Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (UMASSPIRG) deals with every year. The first meeting of the semester will be held at 7 tonight in Campus Center room 163. A Columbus Day bike-a-thon and "cash for trash" program will be presented.

SPRING 1982 DEAN'S LIST

The following undergraduate students have earned the congratulations of the University for achieving Dean's List status for the Spring semester 1982. These students compiled a cumulative average of at least 3.5 with 12 or more graded credits for the semester. Fewer than 15% of the University's students meet this high standard.

UM women golfers win

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's golf team, paced by a sensational one under par 73 by Marlene Susienka, defeated Mount Holyoke College and Springfield College at Hickory Ridge Country Club this past Friday.

Susienka birdied five holes en route to a 16 stroke victory margin over the second place golfer.

"Marlene was just sensational," said UMass golf coach Jack Leaman, "She shot a really terrific round and set the competitive course record for collegiate women at the club."

UMass had a 15 stroke victory margin over second place finisher, Mount Holyoke with the Minutewomen scoring a 368 team total and MHC notching a 383. Springfield was well back with a 410.

Following Susienka for UMass was Nola Edie who finished fifth overall with a 93. Next on the scorecard for the Minutewomen was Jane Egan, who placed eighth with a 98. Rounding out the scoring (only the top four scores are counted) was Sandy Fletcher whose 104 was good for twelfth.

Also competing for UMass were Teresa Collins, who shot a 107, and Mary Ann Lombardi, who had a debut score of 109.

Football

It seems like Garry Pearson could gain 100 yards in his sleep. The senior tailback rushed for 107 yards on 22 carries against Harvard despite not carrying the ball for much of the fourth quarter when the Minutemen were forced to play catch-up football. Pearson played with a slight hamstring pull but should be at full strength for this week's Yankee Conference opener with the University of Rhode Island.

Harvard coach Joe Restic had nothing but praise for the Minuteman running game.

"That fullback Murray (Tom) is one hell of a fullback. He blocks exceptionally well and runs hard," said Restic.

As for Pearson, Restic put his ability into terms that any Yankee Conference coach would agree with.

"We all know by now how good a football player Pearson is," admired Restic.

A look at the Yankee Conference stat sheet shows several UMass players among the leaders in different categories.

Pearson leads all Yankee Conference rushers with a 139 yards per game average after three games. Already the all-time rushing leader in University of Massachusetts football history, the durable senior continues to secure his place in the record books by piling up consistent yardage.

Dean Pecevich is listed as fourth among Yankee Conference quarterbacks in completions per game with 10 per outing while Ron Mangarelli is fourth in receiving.

Finally, Rich Jenkins is second in kickoff return yardage among Yankee Conference kickoff returners with a 21.7 yard average. The senior tailback is having a fine season filling in for Pearson at tailback in addition to running back kicks.

Gibbons paces UM to tourney title

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

Jeff Gettler was a very happy man yesterday. He hadn't shaved recently and he hadn't had hardly any sleep in the past couple of days. But he was a very happy man.

And with good reason. Gettler's University of Massachusetts men's soccer team travelled down to Baltimore, Maryland over the weekend and came back at 5 am yesterday morning toting the championship trophy from the Loyola Invitational Tournament and one individual player, senior Mike Gibbons, carried the Most Valuable Player along just to keep the two trophies as a matched set.

The tournament was a four team pool that included a very good Loyola team as well as perrenial soccer powerhouses Cornell and Vanderbilt.

UMass earned its way to the final with an overtime victory over Cornell in a game which saw all the scoring in the game done during the last five minutes and 41 seconds of the game and three minutes and 59 seconds into the overtime period.

According to Gettler, the Cornell game was a bittersweet victory for the team, because the starting lineup was unable to gel but the substitutes were able to pick up the slack.

"We played terribly in the first half and the score was still 0-0. Overall, during the game we didn't play that well," said Gettler.

And UMass hopes for a shot at the championship certainly looked bleak when Cornell netted the first goal of the game with just 5:41 left on the clock.

The Minutemen dug in however, and three minutes and 36 seconds later, freshman Mark Jeffrey scored on a pass from Mike Mahoney and it was overtime.

It was overtime and it was MVP Gibbons who ended it. Gibbons took a pass from Mike Rudd and booted the ball past the Cornell goalie for a clutch come-from-behind victory.

The victory over Cornell didn't necessarily mean that the Minutemen would wrap the trophy up and head for home though because the next game was against the home team Loyola.

Once again, the Minutemen came through with what Gettler termed the team's "best game so far" and once again the victory was keyed by the foot of Gibbons, who scored the only tally of the game at 20:24 of the first half to pace UMass to a 1-0 victory.

And Gettler is probably still smiling. He told you so.

Runners creep by URI

By JOHN WHITE
Collegian Correspondent

This weekend, as many sports fans devoted their attention to the UMass-Harvard football game or just lamented over the NFL strike, the University of Massachusetts mens' cross-country team journeyed down to Kingston, R.I. to participate in a race hosted by the University of Rhode Island.

Coach O'Briens' team, made up mostly of freshmen and first-year runners, narrowly defeated the U.R.I. squad by a score of 27-28.

Although the five-mile race was won by Joe Swift of U.R.I. in a time of 25:24, the UMass team was victorious because of the fact that they took four out of the top six places.

UMass' winning performance was paced by Rick Doiron, who ran a close second place with a time of 25:30, a mere six seconds off Swift's time. Following Doiron to wrap up the victory were: Red LaFlamme in fourth, James MacPhee in fifth and John Keelan with a sixth place finish.

The win brought the UMass record to 1-1, but Coach O'Brien felt the win was more important.

"It gives some of my younger runners additional experience that will be needed in upcoming races.

"Last weeks' loss to a strong Boston College team can maybe be attributed to the fact that B.C. had already had a race under their belts," said O'Brien.

When asked if his team was going through a rebuilding stage, O'Brien replied, "No, not at all. I have a lot of strong runners that are improving their performances in each outing.

So now, with a win behind them, the UMass team is preparing to travel to the Atlantic Ten Championships in Philadelphia, PA. The race is going to be held in Belmont Park, which according to O'Brien, is "one of the most difficult courses in the East."

Last year at the A.T.C.'s, UMass finished fourth overall among stiff competition such as Rutgers, the number one team in the conference, and Penn State, which was ranked fourth in the nation last year. With both these teams returning and other teams like Rhode Island participating, O'Brien expects a good race.

"With my runners doing better with each race, and now that they have a little more experience, I believe they can place well down at Belmont Park," said O'Brien.

Fourth and Goal

By BILLY SHEA
Collegian Staff

Last week, before the Harvard fiasco, University of Massachusetts head football coach Bob Pickett stressed the need for the Minutemen to be more consistent on offense and to cut down on turnovers in order to be a better football team.

Pickett will undoubtedly be emphasizing these same points this week in practice after the UMass offense turned the ball over five times in the 31-14 loss to Harvard Saturday.

Even more significant is that Harvard scored three of their four touchdowns immediately following interceptions thrown by Dean Pecevich and his replacement Barrett McGrath.

We need more consistency on offense," said Pickett, "We must do a better job in controlling the football. I am not satisfied with our offense. Against Harvard, turnovers killed us."

RON MANGARELLI

Collegian Player-of-the-Game

BY BILLY SHEA
Collegian Staff

It may seem ridiculous to select a Collegian Player-of-the-Game after such a disappointing performance by the University of Massachusetts football team, but one player did emerge as an additional and much needed offensive threat for the Minutemen.

If any positive note came out of last Saturday's 31-14 loss to Harvard as far as the Minutemen are concerned, it would have to be the performance of senior wide receiver Ron Mangarelli.

Mangarelli caught six passes for 117 yards including a 69 yard touchdown reception in the fourth quarter from Barrett McGrath. For these exploits Mangarelli has been chosen as the Collegian Player-of-the-Game.

The Red Bank, N.J. native came up with the big offensive play UMass was looking for when he caught McGrath's pass at midfield, shook off a Harvard defender and outran Harvard safety Chris Myers for the touchdown that brought the Minutemen within striking distance at 17-14.

But Harvard came right back and scored touchdowns on their next two possesions totally negating any momentum Mangarelli generated with his touchdown jaunt.

With the powerful running attack of Garry Pearson, Tom Murray, and Rich Jenkins moving the ball upfield behind the fine blocking of Scott LaFond, Gerry Gordon and the rest of the UMass offensive line, Mangarelli has been thrown to sparingly over the last two seasons.

In fact, Mangarelli almost equaled his total output of last season with his performance at Harvard Stadium. Last season he caught eight passes for 117 yards and one touchdown.

Hopefully, the Minutemen will solve their passing problems and Mangarelli can come through with the big catches during the all-important Yankee Conference schedule which begins next week at the University of Rhode Island, last year's co-Yankee Conference regular season champions with UMass.

Sorry your Player-of-the-Game honors came on such a down weekend for UMass football, Ron.

Duffey to take charge; others return to posts

By PAUL BELVAL
Collegian Staff

The people who were appointed to fill the vacancies created when former Chancellor Henry Koffler resigned last May will be assuming their old posts Friday when Joseph Duffey takes over Koffler's old job.

When Koffler left May 1, to accept a position as president at the University of Arizona, Loren Baritz was appointed acting chancellor, Harry Allen became acting provost and vice chancellor of academic affairs, and John Conlon took over as acting dean of the School of Business Administration.

Now that the chancellor's position has been filled by Duffey, these men will all move back to their old jobs.

"Everyone will go back to where they were," Baritz said. "Everyone takes one step to the left."

Baritz will step back to his position as provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs.

Allen, who held Baritz's post for the past five months, will resume his duties as dean of the School of Business Administration.

Conlon will go back to teaching courses as a professor of business.

This is the second time in the past two years that this kind of a shuffle has taken place.

Baritz took over as acting chancellor in December of 1980 when Koffler suffered a heart attack while attending a dinner in the Campus Center.

Koffler returned in mid-January last year, and Baritz resumed his job as provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs.

In the past five months as acting chancellor, Baritz has redrafted the academic affairs portion of the Long Range Plan for the University and has spent much of his time preparing the school and the administration for Duffey's takeover.

Baritz, who was a candidate for the president's position at the New School for Social Research in New York last spring, refused to comment on any future plans to leave the UMass administrtation. "Anything's possible," he said.

Khomeini rule opponents to stage effigy execution

By MICHAEL FOLEY
Collegian Staff

About 15 Iranian students plan to take part in a world-wide campaign against the Khomeini regime today by staging a mock execution at noon in front of the Student Union Building.

"There will be a mock execution scene and some street theatre in protest of the execution of more than 20,000 people and imprisonment of 50,000 political prisoners by Khomeini's regime since June 20, 1981," said a UMass graduate who wished to be identified as Bijan.

Bijan asked that his last name not be used and the names of other students involved be kept secret in order to shield them from retaliation from Khomeini supporters.

Any student who protests the regime will have his name passed on to the Iranian government by "Khomeini's terrorists," Bijan said. The government will prevent their families from sending them money for their education.

"For instance, my money has been cut off," said Bijan.

"A few weeks ago Khomeini terrorists atteked our people in Dallas, Texas," Bijan said. "Three people were stabbed. More than 20 terrorists were arrested by the police and only three of them spoke English. That means they came directly from Iran to suppress students. They weren't students, but terrorists who came trying to suppress any opposition."

Protests are taking place around the world, he said. The campaign is being organized by the Moslem Iranian Students Society which supports groups inside Iran in opposition to the government.

"More than 90 percent of the population supported Khomeini at the beginning of the revolution. Now they have turned against him. People ask why," Bijan said.

"He didn't have the power to solve the country's problems and he didn't want to give any kind of freedom to the people," Bijan said.

The group will also have an information table set up today in the Campus Center concourse.

UMass PIRG bicyclists: on your marks, set, pedal!

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (UMassPIRG) will hold a three-day, 185-mile bike-a-thon over the Columbus Day weekend to raise money for the Bottle Bill.

Over 100 UMass students attended the MASSPIRG organizational meeting last night, most seeking to work on the Bottle Bill issue.

A referendum question on the November 2 ballot will ask Massachusetts voters if they support the "Bottle Bill" passed into law earlier this year, which would require deposits on bottles and cans. The bill will go into effect January 1, 1983 if voters give their approval.

The bike-a-thon will start at the New York state line near Pittsfield and will run through Westfield, Springfield, Amherst, Worcester and Boston. The riders will sleep in Pittsfield Friday night before starting early Saturday morning, and will spend the following two nights in Westfield and Worcester.

Bikers can ride the entire 185 miles, or they can choose to ride a shorter distance, according to Merrill Gay, one of the event's organizers.

He expects about 30 or 40 cyclists to travel the entire distance, with possible 50 others traveling shorter distances.

Speaking on the Bottle Bill and MASSPIRG in general was Northampton attorney Jonathan Souweine, a former MASSPIRG attorney.

"Environmental groups in Massachusetts have staked their reputations on the Bottle Bill," Souweine said. "If they fail, their very survival is threatened."

"Strong political forces in the Commonwealth have noticed that MASSPIRG has become a major political force," said Souweine. He noted that this may have been a factor in the effort of the UMass Board of Trustees to remove the optional MASSPIRG $2 fee from student bills, an effort that was only stopped when MASSPIRG went to court to obtain a restraining order.

Members of the Italian peacekeeping force move through the township of Corniche Nazraa, near the International Airport in West Beirut.

Israel evacuates Beirut; US Marine landing cleared

BEIRUT (AP) — Israeli troops and armor evacuated Beirut's harbor yesterday and prepared to leave the airport after resolving a dispute with the United States that cleared the way for landing 1,200 Marine peacekeepers.

The Israeli government, meanwhile, approved a fullscale judicial inquiry into the massacre of Palestinians in west Beirut, and the PLO's chief of staff, Brig. Saad Sayel, was reported ambushed and killed in eastern Lebanon.

"We are expecting the Americans in the next 48 hours. We told them they could land at the airport, if the Lebanese government agreed it was OK with us," said Lt. Col. Yaacov Perez, deputy spokesman at the Israeli military headquarters in Baabda, five miles east of Beirut.

Diplomatic sources in Beirut said the Israelis had insisted on keeping an air traffic controller at the airport even when the Marines arrived.

But U.S. diplomatic sources in Tel Aviv said the dispute was resolved and that the American contingent in the multinational force probably would be able to deploy in Beirut today as scheduled.

Israeli authorities were not available to confirm the resolution of the dispute, though the Tel Aviv command said Israeli troops would leave west Beirut today as promised.

Israel radio reported that U.S. Ambassador Morris Draper met with Maj. Gen. Amir Drori, head of Israel's northern command, for talks on the airport dispute. Details were not immediately available.

The United States insisted that Israeli troops leave west Beirut before the Marines landed in the Lebanese capital, and the Marines' scheduled arrival there last Sunday was put off until Israel announced its readiness to leave.

About 100 Israeli soldiers, along with personnel carriers, jeeps and trucks, rolled out of the Beirut harbor area yesterday morning.

The departure of the Israelis left French, Italian and Lebanese forces in control of the port for the first time since Israeli forces invaded west Beirut on Sept. 15, one day after the assassination of then President-elect Bashir Gemayel.

French paratrooopers and Italian infantrymen took up positions in and around the Sabra and Chatilla refugee camps to help the newly reconstructed Lebanese army with security and to prevent the recurrence of the Sept. 16-18 massacre of hundreds of men, women and children in the camps.

In Jerusalem, Prime Minister Menachem Begin's government decided to set up a full-scale judicial inquiry into Israel's conduct during the massacre at Sabra and Chatilla.

19 plead innocent to larceny charges

BOSTON — Nineteen people, including three state welfare workers, pleaded innocent yesterday to stealing $287,000 in welfare funds, Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti announced.

Suffolk Superior Court Judge J.P. McGuire released all the defendants on personal recognizance and scheduled a pretrial conference for Oct. 15.

The defendants include 16 state, county and city employees and a number of high-salaried individuals working in the private sector, Bellotti said.

A total of 93 indictments were issued, including larceny of welfare money and making false statements to illegally obtain assistance payments, food stamps and free medical care.

Bellotti said those indicted included three Boston school teachers, three state welfare workers, a clerk in the Middlesex County treasurer's office and a Boston Housing Court clerk.

Arraignments for four others were delayed for various reasons, said Frank Falacci, a spokesman for Bellotti.

IT'S ON!! Shamie vs. Kennedy

HANOVER — Republican Ray Shamie presented a $10,000 check yesterday to a school and thanked officials for helping to arrange a debate with Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., his opponent in November's U.S. Senate election.

"You know, somehow prayers just seem to get answered around here," said John W. Shayne Jr., administrator of the Cardinal Cushing School and Training Center, which educates 190 mentally retarded youngsters.

A Shamie campaign spokesman said the debate probably would be held in mid-to late October.

As Shamie prepared to leave the school, one student clearly showed whom she supported.

"I hope you win," 16-year-old Lisa said to Shamie. "Man, you're neat."

Jury resumes talks in Holyoke fire case

SPRINGFIELD — A jury weighed evidence for an hour and 45 minutes yesterday before the judge sent its members to a hotel for the night in the case of a Holyoke tenement manager accused of paying two teen-agers to set a fire that killed seven people.

The jury of nine women and three men, who are sequestered, will resume deliberations today at 9 a.m.

The jury interrupted its deliberations once to ask Hampden Superior Court Judge Raymond Cross to explain what assault and battery meant in the indictment.

Cross earlier explained the charges to the jury, which is considering whether Rafael Davila, 42, is guilty of seven counts of murder and one count of arson.

A mother and her four children were trapped and died in the fire. Two women died in leaps from third-floor windows.

William Teahan, assistant district attorney, told jurors Davila schemed for days before the fire on Aug. 24, 1981 — offering money to teen-agers to set the blaze and moving his furniture out of the condemned tenement.

'Talks stall fault of co.' —— strikers

By DAVE LINTON
Collegian Correspondent

Gnomon Copy strikers accused the owners of trying to break the union by stalling negotiations after the owners postponed yesterday's negotiation meeting.

"They think they can hold out longer than we can. They want to break the union. It's obvious by their stalling tactics," said striker spokesperson Mary-Erin Crook.

"I'm going to go on as long as I can. When I can't go any further, we'll close the doors which means they will lose their jobs and so will I," said Catherine Iannacchino, Gnomon Copy co-owner.

"I'm in as much of a rush to settle as they are. Look what the strike has done to my business," she said.

Iannacchino said Gnomon Copy will close up shop if the strike prevents them from doing business.

The store has lost 80 to 90 percent of its business, strikers said.

Negotiations were postponed by Gnomon Copy vice-president John Sytek, who is advising co-owners Roland Wetherbee and Iannacchino in the labor dispute. Both sides said negotiations will continue 4 p.m. Friday although neither side has confirmed this to the other side.

Sytek said he postponed the meeting because of other business commitments he had.

"The original meeting was tentative on commitments I have. I offered to meet Wednesday afternoon but Carol (MacColl) couldn't make it. We all have other commitments. It's difficult to get everyone together," he said.

Carol MacColl, a full-time employee at Gnomon Copy for three years, said Sytek refused to give her a reason for the delay.

MacColl said Sytek knew two of the strikers couldn't meet on Wednesday afternoon and that his postponement was deliberate.

Ticket sales for DeLucia/Corea are lagging

By LESLIE FERNANDES
Collegian Correspondent

Union Program Council members are surprised that ticket sales for the Paco DeLucia, Chick Corea concert are lagging.

These two performers are considered to be two of the finest jazz musicians in the world and enjoyed vast successes when they performed here before, said Bill Prichett, talent coordinator for UPC. The current tour marks the first time they have performed together and is the promotional vehicle for their recent duo album, Touchstone.

"I can't understand the lack of interest. They're both excellent musicians. They both drew large crowds when they were here before," said Prichett.

The combination of the two was expected to draw even more interest, he said.

"We're asking $7.50 and $8.50 for students; $8.50 and $9.50 for the general public. Besides, I can't think of a better way to spend a Sunday night," Pritchett said.

Prichett said U.P.C. was doing well financially and isn't trying to make a profit. Instead its aim is to offer UMass students the opportunity to enjoy prime entertainment.

Corea is a native of Chelsea. He began playing piano at the age of four. In the early stages of his career he played the clubs around Boston and Cape Cod with his father, who is a jazz trumpeter and bassist. Corea has played with such greats as Miles Davis, Sarah Vaughin and Jean-Lue Ponty. His album, The Leprechaun, won a grammy for best instrumental arrangement and best jazz performance.

DeLucia's musical training began at the age of 12. He and his brother Pepe de Algeciras, an accomplished singer, mastered the art of "Cante-Flamenco" — combining of guitar and voice.

DeLucia's career has taken him through Europe and parts of Asia, where he is credited with having introduced Flamenco.

ABC House offers growth for minority h.s. students

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Correspondent

"It's not often that you can find a place to grow," said Sanford Livingston, 17, from Trenton, New Jersey, who is presently a senior at Amherst Regional High School.

Livingston is one of 6,000 highly motivated, minority, high school students nationwide who were given a "A Better Chance."

"A Better Chance," called ABC, is an educational program for talented and disadvantaged students who come from areas where they do not have the opportunity to receive a quality education.

"You learn to live away from home, balance your schedule; discipline yourself and you get to find out what college life is like," Livingston said.

Before joining ABC, Livingston was accepted to various private schools but could not afford the tuition costs, he said.

"All those years I was struggling to get somewhere," he said.

With ABC Livingston now has hope of attending a college of his choice, either Bucknell University or Rutgers, where he plans to study business and computers.

"It (ABC) taught me how to communicate," said Wallace McCloud, 16, originally from Orange, New Jersey, now a junior at Amherst Regional High School.

"My social life is expanded and my academics are expanded," McCloud said.

Robinson Khosah, 28, a resident tutor at the ABC house who is now working toward a Ph.D degree in chemistry at the University of Massachusetts, works as both teacher and a friend to the young men in the house.

"There is some sense of personal gratification when I see them (ABC students) improving in science and math," Khosah said.

"When a family is 300 miles away, a student may get homesick but not many problems arise in the house," he said. "I have helped them become like others their age."

"When a student comes knocking on your door at 11:00, how can you turn him away?" Khosah asked.

UMass has been helpful with the ABC program in several ways.

"A lot of the members of the faculty are very helpful in the program," said Mary Ellen Clarke of Amherst, former co-president and a 1982-83 board member of ABC house.

Besides Khosah, other UMass students have been resident tutors and members of the Board of Directors.

On October 2, the ABC program will have a foliage walk through Amherst Conservation Areas. Walkers are able to earn $1 for each mile walked. All the money that is earned will go to benefit the ABC program. Interested students and citizens are encouraged to participate.

"Of course we would like more help from the administrators, educators, and students of UMass," said Mitchell Smith, 23, the resident director of the ABC program.

Amherst started their ABC program in 1968, and is one of 165 programs of its kind across the United States. Students are recommended by teachers, principals, or guidance counselors and placed in private schools of exceptional quality.

Group therapy the answer for women

By MARY L. PALAZZO
Collegian Correspondent

Women afraid of being alone or of being themselves can now overcome these fears by turning to therapy groups.

Women's therapy groups seek to identify and resolve common problems that affect women, Estelle Gorfine, a psychotherapist who practices in Amherst, said.

In therapy groups run by Gorfine, issues such as this may be confronted:

A woman sits waiting for the phone to ring. It is now 10:30 p.m. and he still hasn't called. She had wanted to go to the library earlier, but she did not want to miss his call. She thinks about calling him, but doesn't want to seem pushy; it might make him angry and then he would not ask her out again. She starts to put an album on the stereo, but remembers he thinks that kind of music is dumb, so she turns on the TV instead and continues to wait.

"Women are constantly in a struggle to feel good enough about themselves in order to get what they need in their lives. Women are continuously putting others before themselves. Women are afraid of being independent and autonomous and seek safety in relying on others. In essence, women are afraid of being alone," Gorfine said.

By discussing problems, needs and concerns, women discover they are not all that different and not alone, Gorfine said.

"Women can learn and grow through being in the presence of others in struggle," she said.

"Each woman is her own authority and ultimately needs to decide who she is and what she wants in her life," Gorfine said.

This goal can be accomplished through "understanding their past and how their past and society have forced them into this position," she said.

"Women should begin to trust themselves and begin to turn it around so they can trust themselves to live by their own feelings, needs and desires," Gorfine said.

Unlike a support group which centers on one particular issue, Gorfine said, an "open" therapy group "does not focus on one issue. It is a place where women can come to bring in individual issues." She said women discuss what is going on in the relationships in their lives as a means of gaining insight into individual problems the woman might be having in herself.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Taking sides on the Capital Punishment issue

Point : retribution and deterrant

It is 10:00 p.m. Your mother walks briskly home from the local Quick Check. A man steps in front of her and pumps three .45 caliber bullets into her body. Later in the evening police apprehend the assailant. You, as a citizen want justice. You feel the murderer must lose the freedom of his life, in the same way he took your mother's life. Life imprisonment, which translates into six years in jail, and ten years watched, is to you, a miscarriage of justice. The death penalty is the only punishment proportionate to the gravity of the offense of your mother's murder. But in Massachusetts, it is illegal.

On the November ballot, Commonwealth residents will have the chance to bring back the death penalty to a convicted criminal, who maliciously and deliberately intended, planned, and carried out the death of another person. A 'yes' vote will reinstate justice: As cold and hard as the verdict the criminal dealt the victim.

As a historical perspective, the framers of the Constitution obviously intended the loss of life as a criminal punishment. The Fifth Amendment to the Constitution advocates the loss of life in accordance with jurisprudence. "...No person shall be twice put in jeopardy of life...nor be deprived of life...without due process of law." Therefore any undertaking to declare Capital Punishment cruel and unusual would require a Constitutional Amendment.

From 1791 until the Supreme Court case McGautha vs. Calif., death has never been held as cruel and unusual punishment by the Supreme Court. After Furrman vs. Georgia in 1972, Capital Punishment came under closer scrutiny. Less complex than the intense judicial debate on the constitutionality of the issue is the easily recognizable public support of Capital Punishment. Harris and Gallup polls consistantly show two-thirds of the nation in favor of the death penalty and three-fifths of the states having Capital Punishment statutes. Many of those against the death penalty, including justices White and Stewart of the Supreme Court, hold their opinions because the death penalty is too infrequently imposed.

The two current arguments, pro and con, are deterrence and the fear of judicial fault.

On the deternee point, the debate is intense, but also inconclusive. But mull it over for a moment. Could you as a self-interested person, be swayed by the fact that a specific action could lead to your death? Would you agree with Political Philosopher Thomas Hobbes, who said, "The greatest fear of man is violent death?"

On judicial fault, there is fear that a portion of the people who would be executed, might later be cleared by new evidence. Granted, a margin of error exists in our judicial system. But precedence shows that both criminals who are guilty, and those who are convicted but maintain innocence, vie for the chair over life among the animals in jail.

Today, ours is the only state where the death penalty is outlawed on constitutional grounds. When you pull the lever to close the curtain in the voting booth, think about that malicious and violent killer in the example. Because one day you might run into him at your own Quick Check.

Dave McCarthy is a Collegian columnist

Counterpoint a plea to humanity

Capital Punishment is a depraved and barbaric method of criminal justice which has no place in an allegedly civilized society. The death penalty also fails because it is not a deterrent to murder, it is not handed out equitably between race and class and it destroys rehabilitative morale in prisons.

Proponents seem to have a grandiose notion of the city streets being safe from crime once the death penalty is instituted. But they say so blindly as if they are totally unaware of the facts.

Richard Nangle

In a campus debate on the death penalty last week Rep. Marie Parente, D-Milford, said "If the punishment deters the crime, then maybe capital punishment will deter capital crime."

Well, if that is the case then why do neighboring states in which the death penalty is in effect in one and abolished in the other show no difference in their murder rates?

Another emotional plea from proponents is that capital punishment will prevent the first-time murderer from killing again. The facts show that less than one percent of those who have been convicted of murder have killed again, while the recidivism rate for other crimes is a much higher 75 percent.

Furthermore, the homicide rate in the 1960's, a period that averaged 24 executions per year, was only 70 percent of the rate in the 1930's when there were an average of 150 executions a year, according to Uniform Crime Reports and National Prisoner Statistics. It has also been documented that the murder rate actually goes up slightly in the weeks surrounding an execution. How can Rep. Parente claim that capital punishment in and of itself is a successful deterrent to murder when the evidence is embarassingly obvious to the contrary?

The death penalty also is much more expensive than life imprisonment, as if that should matter. Today it would cost $1 million to execute someone in the Commonwealth while it would cost considerably less to keep the person in prison.

For those who say the death penalty would rid persons of dangerous characters who might kill other criminals, the question is why are these dangerous characters running around unsupervised? Here the death penalty is clearly a band-aid solution to a deeper social problem.

Another malignant tumor on the death penalty is the fact that not a single wealthy person has been executed in the United States. Also, no white man has ever been put to death for killing a black man. The death penalty has always been used most frequently on minorities and the poor. If passed that trend will most definitely continue.

If all this is not sufficient to oppose the death penalty consider that its restoration could mean execution for innocent people as it has in the past. In a society which has a far from perfect criminal justice system the death penalty should never be considered.

One of the most outstanding and depraved ironies associated with capital punishment is the fact that it is most ardently supported by the same "pro-lifers" who support a constitutional amendment to ban abortions. While these people yearn to protect the unborn they have the audacity to regard certain living humans as being completely without worth to society and therefore meritous of a violent death.

Don't be misled, execution in the electric chair is a violent death. It is anything but humane. Most chair victims have to be jolted with electricity two or three times before they are dead. They can feel the voltage singe their skin and literally cook their entire bodies before they perish. Some states prefer to inject the guilty party with a lethal substance similar to that which would put a dog or a cat to sleep. Who will administer this injection? Would that not also be murder?

Death penalty proponents speak of their belief in God and an "eye for an eye." Ask yourself if Jesus Christ would have advocated the execution of another human being?

Another consideration which may or may not have any significance is the fact that of the five people put to death in this country since 1977, four of them have asked to die. Prisoners may prefer death to life in prison.

But whether or not the victim wants to die, the state should not be in the business of executing its citizens even if they have committed a terrible act such as murder. Remember that if the death penalty becomes law in November, Massachusetts will be executing people in your name. The only way you can prevent that from happening is to vote no on question #2.

Constitutionality of selective service bills are examined

To the Editor:

There are two bills that have passed Congress which will affect every student here. What these bills propose to do is deny federal financial aid to men who have not registered for the draft. The bills are proposed by Sen. Hayakawa in the Senate and by Rep. Solomon in the House. Both bills passed Congress by large margins and are now in conference committee to resolve their slight differences. This law will probably take affect by July 1, 1983.

These bills affect everyone because of the bureaucracy involved. As we have heard, there have been many mistakes made by Selective Service computers when trying to track down non-registrants even on the very small scale that they have so far tried. Many of the accused were older men who were not even supposed to register. One was even a three-and-one-half month old girl whom they threatened with jail if she didn't register! They will have to cross-reference virtually every school with every student and neither Selective Service nor the Department of Education have national computers. What this means is that hundreds or thousands of people at every school could accidentally be denied financial aid. This could happen to women, older male students, men who have registered as well as those men who haven't registered. It will be very difficult for the Financial Aid Office to handle this.

It is important to view these bills in a political as well as a purely functional way. These bills and related legislation are part of the rising militarism in our society. Through draft registration many formerly non-military governmental agencies are being used to support the Pentagon and Selective Service: the Post Office; Social Security; Internal Revenue Service; and now the financial aid offices of schools around the co.. try. This is in addition to the economic policy of forcing people into the Armed Forces as their only job option. To further this kind of society, Rep. Solomon has proposed a bill (not yet voted upon) to deny any federal aid whatsoever to non-registrants (welfare, food stamps, unemployment benefits, etc.).

There is a lot we can do to fight these bills because ther is a lot of opposition within schools and among those who would have to enforce this law. There are going to be many challenges to the constitutionality of these bills as soon as they become law.

"Shooting Pains"

If you're a victim of sciatics, you know what "shooting pains" are all about. The sometimes excrutiating pain of sciatica frequently affects the hip, thigh and back of the leg. The ankle and foot are sometimes affected, too. But that's not where the problem is.

The sciatic nerve, the largest nerve in the body, extends from the lower spine to the back of thigh and knee. Then it divides. One nerve goes down the front of the lower leg, and the other goes down the back of the leg.

It's the inflamation of the sciatic nerve that causes the pain. This can be triggered by an irritated nerve root. What causes the irritation? The cause may be traced to a misalignment of the spinal column that's putting abnormal pressure on the roots of the sciatic nerves as they pass between the vertebrae.

Through x-rays and other procedures, the doctor of chiropractic can locate the misaligned vertebrae. Using a gentle adjustment, she can align it properly again to help eliminate the cause and the pain.

Zoo Disc hosts Ultimate

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

If you are in the area of the Southwest playing fields at any time this weekend and the sky suddenly becomes filled with flying saucers, don't run off telling everyone that the war of the worlds is about to begin.

These saucers are frisbees and there will be quite a few of them cruising through UMass air space as the ultimate frisbee team hosts the Ultimate Affair from Saturday morning until Monday afternoon.

The Ultimate Affair will be the world's largest ultimate frisbee event ever held and will feature 60 men's and 16 women's ultimate frisbee teams competing for the Ultimate Affair tournament championship.

Such local teams as UMass' own Zoo Disc squad, the Northeast area champions, the Boston Hostages and the Rude Boys (another Boston based team) will be competing as well as frisbee powerhouses such as teams from Michigan State and Glassboro State College.

The whole tournament gets under way at 10:30 a.m. Saturday morning as teams enter pool play in pools of six teams. The top three teams in each pool will then enter double elimination playoff rounds in an effort to earn a berth in the championship game.

Ultimate frisbee, for those of you who have never seen the sport before, is a game set up with seven players one on each side attempting to move the frisbee to the end of the playing field through a series of passes. The frisbee cannot be carried and if it touches the ground the other team takes over right away and tries to move the disc the other way.

The action is fast paced and exciting to watch.

The finals for women will be held on Sunday at 3:30 p.m. and the men's finals will be held at the same time on Monday.

So, follow that line of invading saucers to their source and don't be scared, that alien creature diving for the disc is Joel Zuckerman, a member of the UMass team.

Canadian Football: It's not quite the game we all know

By ELLIOTT KALB
Collegian Staff

To paraphase Will Rogers, I never met a football game I didn't like.

The Canadian Football League (the CFL) will continue to have American national television telecasts for the remainder of the NFL Player's strike. After last Sunday's doubleheader (blowouts by the British Columbia Lions 46-14 and later by the Edmonton Eskimos) 39-17, football fans would be wise to pay attention to this league.

The CFL plays a different brand of football, but the players still get hit and try to knock the living brains out of their opponents. There are even some familiar players. Darrell Wilson, a defensive back for British Columbia, played last year for the University of Connecticut. At least 40 percent of the players went to school in the U.S.

Edmonton quarterback Warren Moon is a product of the University of Washington, the star of the 1978 Rose Bowl game, and now the CFL's leading quarterback.

Basically, the rules give an advantage to the offensive team, which results in an average of over 53 points a game, more than 10 points more than the average NFL game.

The rules are simple if you take this advice: picture seeing a football game on drugs. The field would be wider (110 yards instead of 100), the end zones are longer (25 yards instead of 10), there are 12 men on the field for each team instead of 11, teams get three downs to get 10 yards instead of four, and offensive men are in motion all over the place.

The scoring is slightly different, too. There are possibilities for 2-point conversions after touchdowns, and a rouge (singles) — awarded when a team kicks the ball out of the end zone or when the kickoff or punt cannot be returned. They are worth one point.

Canadian football stands right alongside Bob and Doug McKenzie, Molson's Golden Ale, Neil Young and Dudley Doorright as products or personalities from Canada which enhance our culture here in the states.

Perhaps the single most important reason that the Canadian Football League is so fascinating with me, is the world situation. British Columbia, Ottawa, Toronto and Montreal all look like great places for a 21 year old transplanted football fan, should the situations you read about on page one of the newspapers get any worse.

In last year's abbreviated baseball schedule, the two best records in the National League were posted by the Cincinnati Reds in the Western Division and by the St. Louis Cardinals in the Eastern.

The split-season format allowed the Los Angeles Dodgers and the Philadelphia Phillies to coast in the second season and still make the playoffs.

Over the winter, the Cardinals made several key additions to their ballclub. They traded Gary Templeton to San Diego for Ozzie Smith in a swap of quality shortstops. They also acquired Lennie Smith from the Phillies in a three-way trade.

These players strengthened the St. Louis defense and added speed. They joined established stars like George Hendrick, the Cards' quiet slugger, and first baseman Keith Hernandez (only 7 HR's this season, but 93 RBI's). They became the first team in baseball in '82 to clinch a division.

The Cardinals were one of only three National League teams not to have won a division title since divisional play began in 1969 (the Padres and the Cubs are the other two). They finished in first this year over tough Philadelphia, Montreal and Pittsburgh teams even though they have hit less HR's than any other team in baseball, 67.

The other ballclub that finished with an excellent record in '81 with nothing to show for it was the Reds. Like an ostrich, management stuck it's head in the sand and idly watched George Foster, Dave Collins, and Ken Griffey leave for greener (literally) pastures.

They waited for the bottom to drop out, and it did. The Reds posted the worst record in baseball in 1982. Tom Seaver and Johnny Bench are shells of their former selves, and newcomers like Alex Trevino and Paul Householder could not take up the slack.

UM rugby sides A-E roll to easy victories

The UMass rugby club continued their domination of rival college sides this past Saturday at the lower Boyden fields when the A team through the E team were all victorious over sides from Renselear and Massachusetts Maritime Academy.

The R.P.I. A side must be wondering why they bothered driving all the way down from upstate New York to square off against UMass this past weekend.

English exchange student Mike Holmes scored twenty points, while George Economou had 12 in a lopsided 78-0 UMass win.

After only three minutes of play UMass had cut over to the passing lane and moved out to a 16-0 lead, and the chatter of "Let's get back in it, let's go," from the R.P.I. side was a little pained and feeble.

Bobby McLaughlin, Nick Cokas, and Billy Carroll, called up from the B side because of injuries, all played a strong eighty minutes.

The Killer B's didn't let the jovial crowd of spectators down in their match. They scored early and won 16-0.

The B's were playing the Mass. Maritime A's, and seemed to be feeling out their A side opponents until Danny Rothenberger put them in the right frame of mind with a vicious stick on MMA's Tom Hanks.

Greg Tawa gave the B's four to work with, and they could have won with that, but they added eight more points from the foot of Martin Bluck and a try by Steve Gordon for their sixteen point total.

The UMass C side rucked and rolled to a 26-3 win over the R.P.I. B side. Trys by Dave Rityna, Dave St. Angelo, Marc Sullivan and Gordy Meyer paced the C's. It was refreshing to see the other team score a few points for the first time of the afternoon.

The final two matches turned out to be the closest of the day as the UMass D's bopped the Mass. Maritime B's 8-4 and the E side squeezed by the R.P.I. C's 4-3.

The Ruggers are away this Saturday, but return home on October 9th against the Mystic River Club.
